Preface

This study began as a dissertation in Assyriology in the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations at the University of Chicago. This dissertation, entitled “Magical Means of Dealing with Ghosts in Ancient Mesopotamia” (MMDG), as indeed the title implies, consisted largely of “magical” prescriptions concerned with expelling ghosts (MMDG nos. 1–71, 77–78). It also included necromantic (nos. 72–76, 79–82) and “ghost assistance/substitute” prescriptions (nos. 83–88), which, since they are not healing rites designed to cure a person afflicted by a ghost, have been excluded from this book. In their place, the current study adds the “medical” means of treating ghost-induced illnesses (quoted from published copies in BAM, AMT etc.) as well as several “magical” prescriptions recently edited by D. Schwemer in THeth 23 (Part IIB). Although some sections of the original dissertation survive virtually intact, others have been completely rewritten to incorporate the new material. All of the Geers’ copies (which were used in the dissertation courtesy of the Assyrian Dictionary Project) have now been collated against the originals in the British Museum. Most of the medical texts in the Kuyunjik collection, as well as the recently catalogued Sippar collection have also been examined. In the process, a few new ghost texts (or parallels to old texts) were discovered. These are here included with the kind permission of the Trustees of the British Museum. CT 23 15–22+ (originally edited by G. Castellino) was reedited in the dissertation from a photograph. All prescriptions (whether included in the old dissertation or not) have been given a new number in accordance with a scheme explained below (Part IIA). In the process, important information as to the original context of the prescriptions could have been lost, to avoid which a chart of the arrangement of prescriptions on the original tablets has been provided (Part IIC). For the convenience of the reader possessing a copy of the original dissertation, a concordance of old and new numbers has also been provided (Part IID).

I would first and foremost like to thank my dissertation supervisor W. Farber for his help, encouragement and erudition. I would also like to extend special thanks to R.D. Biggs, with whom I first studied magical and medical texts, who helped in many ways, large and small, in shepherding the original dissertation to completion. Without the help and support of McGuire Gibson none of this might ever have been accomplished. I would also like to thank the other faculty of the Oriental Institute (past and present), who have, over the years, contributed to my understanding of ancient Mesopotamian languages and culture: J.A. Brinkman, M. Civil, I.J. Gelb, G. Gragg, H. Hunger, S. Parpola, E. Reiner, and J. Renger. I would also like to extend special thanks to W.R. Mayer for giving me many helpful suggestions on the original dissertation. I would also like to thank the Assyrian Dictionary Project for access to the Geers’ copies and to the Trustees of the British Museum for permission to use their unpublished texts. For allowing me to collate the ghost texts in their care I would like to thank Christopher Walker of the British Museum, London, Joachim Marzahn of the Vorderasiatisches Museum, Berlin, Béatrice André-Salvini and Alain Duclos of the Louvre, Paris, Jean-Marie Durand of the École Pratique des Hautes Études, Paris, Eric Gubel of the Musée Cinquenaire, Brussels and Gretchen Worden of the Mutter Museum of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia. A special accolade goes to Sarah Collins of the British Museum, without whose persistence and intimate knowledge of the collections the original of a misnumbered Geers copy would probably never have been located.

Among non-Assyriologists, I would like to thank S. Humphreys, H. İnalçık, and M. Murrin for helping to develop my abilities of critical thinking. Also central in helping to shape my scholarship were classes of C. Grey and R.I. Moore. The assassinated I. Coulianu will also be much missed. Burton Andersen, M.D. has provided invaluable assistance in the translation of medical terminology.

Finally, I would like to thank C. Faraone and R. Jas who have read much of the current manuscript and made many useful suggestions. I hope that this book will not disappoint them.

Without the support, financial, intellectual and otherwise, of my parents Prof. John Scurlock, UMKC School of Law and Prof. Jean Scurlock, KCCC, my studies would not have been possible.

Finally, I would like to thank my husband, Richard H. Beal for much questioning, suggesting, cajoling, arguing, xeroxing, and editing that added immeasurably to this work.

A note to the reader

The author wishes to apologize for a delay, due to no fault of her own, of some six years from the date of submission and approval to the date of publication of this book. In this time-period scholarship has not stood still. While the author has made changes necessitated by collations and newly published texts, in the interests of preventing any further delay, she has chosen not to attempt to incorporate all of the valuable information contained in those secondary works which have appeared in the meantime. Of these, one should particularly note Nils Heeßel, Babylonisch-assyrische Diagnostik, AOAT 43 (Münster: Ugarit Verlag, 2000) in which Tablets 15–33 of the Diagnostic and Prognostic Series, previously Labat, TDP, have been reedited with extensive commentary. For more on ghosts and medicine (chapter 2) see now J. Scurlock and Burton Andersen, Diagnoses in Assyrian and Babylonian Medicine (Champaign: Univ. of Illinois Press, 2005).

Despite this delay, the author believes that the book still has much to offer, and hopes that the reader will agree that it was worth the wait.

Chapter 1

INTRODUCTION

When we think of ghosts, we think of strange noises and apparitions, not of migraine headaches and rumblings in the stomach. And when we think of the “exorcism” of an afflicting ghost, we are imagining hocus pocus, not the administration of a bandage, salve or potion containing medicinal plants. In the following study, I explore the interaction between “magic” and “medicine” as applied specifically to ghosts, and attempt to answer the following questions. What sorts of ailments did the ancient Mesopotamians attribute to ghosts? In healing rituals, who performed what part? When and where were such rituals performed? What is the relationship of the recitations to the actions which were performed during the course of the ritual?¹ Under what circumstances and to which gods were offerings made in the course of healing rituals? What procedures were used and for which particular symptoms? To what extent were medicaments intended as fuga daemonorum and to what extent were they used simply to treat the symptoms produced by the ghost? The question of the identification of plants used for “hand of ghost” and the related question of their medical effectiveness is sufficiently complex to warrant a study in its own right, and hence shall not be dealt with here.

Prospectus

The present study does not deliberately exclude any text in which ghosts are blamed for producing illness² regardless of whether anyone might wish to classify it as “magical” or “medical”. However, for the convenience of readers who wish to make a distinction between that part of ancient “magic” which concerned itself with healing and ancient “medicine”, I discuss procedures which most scholars would prefer to regard as “magical” (i.e. figurines, libations, etc.) separately from those which would normally be considered “medical” (i.e. bandages, enemas and the like).

To facilitate discussion, I have also carved up the original texts and separated out the individual prescriptions contained in them. To some extent, this is justified by the fact that there was apparently no canonical order for ghost prescriptions. Although texts often parallel one another, omissions and substitutions are frequent and it is by no means unheard of to have a situation where the same series of prescriptions appear in two different texts in completely different (even inverse) order.³ This is a feature which, to judge from a preliminary analysis of medical texts in general, is by no means confined to ghost prescriptions.⁴ Treating the texts as collections of separable prescriptions also makes it easier to integrate into the discussion references to ghost induced problems listed in the Diagnostic and Prognostic series (Labat, TDP).

Introduction

Anyone interested in the original arrangement of prescriptions on any individual tablet should consult the relevant chart (Part IIC), which also includes a description of medico-magical prescriptions which do not seem to involve ghosts and which have therefore not been translated here. Prescriptions are ordered and numbered in accordance with the following scheme. The two “ghostly scream” prescriptions come first (nos. 1–2), followed by apparitions (nos. 3–54) and then physical problems (nos. 55–227) with a category of broken or unspecified “hand” of ghost ailments at the end (nos. 228–352). Within each category, prescriptions are numbered in accordance with the procedure employed, beginning with ghost NAM.BÚR.BI’s, proceeding via libations, figurines and other surrogates, magical encirclement and amulets to fumigants, bandages, salves, aliments, potions, washes, and suppositories.

The Texts

The majority of our texts were written in Assyrian script in the Neo-Assyrian period, and were found at the Assyrian capital, Nineveh.⁵ There are also a few texts from Nineveh in Babylonian script.⁶ Of the texts from Nineveh, only ten have colophons preserved. Eight of these⁷ are from Aššurbanipal’s library. The other two⁸ were apparently privately owned,⁹ but there is no reason not to date them to the Sargonid period (721–627 B.C.) as well. The next largest group of texts is also in Assyrian script, but was found at the religious center and former capital, Aššur.¹⁰ Those which have colophons preserved show them to stem from the activities of Kišir-Aššur son of Nabû-bēssunu¹¹ and his nephew Kišir-Nabû son of Šamaš-ibni,¹² both āšīpus attached to the temple of Aššur, chief god of the Assyrian pantheon. One of the texts¹³ is dated to 658 B.C. by limmu-eponym and both Kišir-Aššur and Kišir-Nabû are known from other sources to have been active during the reign of Aššurbanipal (668–627).¹⁴ One text reputedly from Aššur which, to judge from the script, is also Neo-Assyrian in date, belonged to a certain Nabû-zēr-kitti-līšir, son of Mardi.¹⁵ There are also two texts found at Sultantepe which contain prescriptions for “hand of ghost”.¹⁶ In addition to these Neo-Assyrian texts, there is one Middle Babylonian text found at Aššur and presumably from the library of Tiglath-pileser I (1114–1076 B.C.),¹⁷ and one Middle Assyrian text.¹⁸ Of the texts known to me, there are nineteen which were not found in Assyria. Of these, seven are from the Hittite capital of Hattuša,¹⁹ one from Babylon,²⁰ one from Nippur,²¹ three from Sippar,²² one from Ur,²³ two are of unknown provenience²⁴ and the remaining four are from Uruk.²⁵ The “Hittite” texts are written either in “Assyro-mitanian” script²⁶ or “mischduktus”,²⁷ and were probably either imported directly from Assyria or copied from imported tablets in Hattuša.²⁸

Lest we forget that scholarship has always been a cooperative process, it should be noted that the colophons reveal that, although some texts were copied from Babylonian originals,²⁹ a larger number (including one of those in Babylonian script) were copied from Assyrian originals.³⁰ There is not now, nor has there ever been, any justification for seeing all of ancient Mesopotamian knowledge as having been formulated in the Old Babylonian period and merely copied mindlessly and without change or alteration for the better part of a millennium.³¹ If the putative Old Babylonian “originals” of Aššurbanipal’s medical texts are ever found, then and only then will it be time to assess the contribution of Assyrian scholarship to the whole, and the extent to which change and development are or are not a part of ancient Mesopotamian tradition.

Format of Prescriptions

Ancient Mesopotamian prescriptions consist of a symptoms list and/or label which states under what conditions the prescription will be of use, dromena (i.e. a set of instructions as to what the healer and/or patient is supposed to do) and/or legomena (i.e. a set text to be recited a specified number of times at appropriate points in the procedure). Some ghost prescriptions (Type A)³² have a format: symptoms list(//) dromena // legomena(// dromena // legomena, etc). Others (Type B)³³ have a format: legomena // (label //) dromena. A third type (Type C)³⁴ consists solely of legomena (usually these are collections of recitations with periodic labels). The fourth and final type (Type D)³⁵ consists of a symptoms list or label and / or dromena. This last comprises the single largest category and may be subdivided into three subtypes: Type D₁ = symptoms list or “If ditto” followed by dromena;³⁶ Type D₂ = label embedded in the *dromena*³⁷ and Type D₃ = just dromena.³⁸ Usually Type D texts involve no legomena, but there are cases where a set text is to be recited but is not actually quoted in full; i.e. the healer was expected to look up the recitation in question in a Type C text.³⁹

This difference in format is certainly striking, but it does not seem to affect the content of the texts.⁴⁰ Not only are similar prescriptions sometimes cast in differing formats,⁴¹ but in one case the very same prescription is found in three different formats.⁴²

In sum, the three hundred and fifty-two odd prescriptions for ghost-induced problems which have come down to us from ancient Mesopotamia are distributed in no fixed or canonical order among some one hundred and thirty-nine texts, most of them written in the Neo-Assyrian period and in Assyrian script. According to the colophons preserved on a number of these texts, the treatment of “hand” of ghost syndrome fell under the purview of the ancient Mesopotamian healing specialist known as the āšīpu.⁴³ The prescriptions of which he kept lists for general reference or which he “excerpted for specific performance” appear in four different formats, or arrangements, of the basic contents, which consist of some indication of the specific problem to be solved, legomena and / or dromena. In the following chapters, each of these shall be dealt with in turn.

Chapter 2

SYMPTOMS OF GHOSTLY AFFLICTION

Ancient Mesopotamian ghosts made themselves obnoxious in three distinct ways – by emitting ghostly screams,⁴⁴ by haunting people in visible form,⁴⁵ and by causing a series of physical problems.⁴⁶ More specifically, two of our prescriptions instruct what to do “if a ghost cries out in a person’s house.”⁴⁷ A further fifty-two deal with apparitions, and another one hundred seventy-three are concerned with headaches, ringing/buzzing in the ears, rumbling stomachs, and the like. The remaining one hundred twenty-five are either fragmentary or simply note that they are directed against “hand” of ghost.

Types of Ghost Causing Problems

Sometimes the labels or introductions attached to ghost prescriptions give details about the nature of the dead person, distinguishing between ghosts of the patient’s relatives on the one hand⁴⁸ and “pursuing”⁴⁹ or “roving”⁵⁰ or “strange”⁵¹ ghosts who have accosted him in the steppe lands on the other.⁵² They also occasionally refer to the precise way in which the ghost in question met his end.

“(The ghost of one) who was killed with a weapon (and) abandoned in the steppe afflicts him.”⁵³

“‘hand’ of a ghost who died through murder”⁵⁴

“Among his relatives, the ghost of (one who) died of thirst afflicts him.”⁵⁵

“The ghost (of one) who died in water afflicts him.”⁵⁶

“The ghost of someone burned to death afflicts him.”⁵⁷

Particularly vicious ghosts are also distinguished: “hand” of a murderous ghost⁵⁸ or “the ‘double’ of the dead person afflicts him.”⁵⁹

A careful examination of such passages shows that the choice of which ghost to blame for what symptoms was not necessarily arbitrary. “(If) he continually see[s] dead persons (in his dreams) . . . (the ghost of one) who was killed with a weapon (and) abandoned in the steppe afflicts him”⁶⁰ makes a certain amount of sense – given the desperate need of abandoned ghosts for food and water,⁶¹ they could be presumed to be the sort to pester strangers for a hand-out.

In a number of cases, the behavior of the victim was seen to mimic that of the ghost in a manner suggestive of possession.

“If his breath is continually short like one who has just come up from the water

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

... the ‘hand’ of the ghost of one who [died] in the water [afflicts him].”⁶²

“If he rubs his face, the ghost (of one) who died in water afflicts him.”⁶³

“If he continually strikes his face and screams, the ghost of someone burned to death afflicts him.”⁶⁴

“(If) his breath has become short (and) constantly enters his throat as if he were thirsting for water, the ‘hand’ of a ghost roving in the (waterless) steppe afflicts him.”⁶⁵

There is also an obvious connection between “roving” (murtappidu) or “roaming” ghosts and the mental derangement or neurological disorders for which they are sometimes blamed.

“[If] his [mind] becomes deranged so that he cannot take (any) action, ‘hand’ of a ro[vi]ng ghost.”⁶⁶

“If the scepter of Sîn has been placed on him and he bends and stretches out his foot, he drones and saliva flows from his mouth, a ghost roving in the steppe afflicts him.”⁶⁷

“If ... his mentation is altered so that he wanders about (urappad) without knowing (where he is) as in affliction by a ghost.”⁶⁸

In other cases, the connection between the symptoms and the ghost was apparently made by looking for homophones or near homophones.

“If his limbs are as quiet as those of a healthy person (but) his mouth is ‘seized’ so that he cannot talk, ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost (var: ‘hand’ of the ghost of someone burned to death).”⁶⁹

“If his limbs are as quiet as those of a healthy person (but) he is silent (i-qá-al) and does not take any food, ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost (var: gh[o]st of someone burned to death).”⁷⁰

Since, as we have seen, incinerated ghosts typically made their victims scream, the silence produced in these cases is something of an anomaly until it is remembered that qalû: “to burn” is a near homophone to qâlu: “to be silent”. Many of the fatal symptoms were, quite naturally, laid at the door of “murderous” ghosts.⁷¹ Particularly telling is the following example.

“If he was wounded on his spine and, as a consequence, he is stopped up so that his excrement cannot come out,⁷² ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost; he will die.”⁷³

One can almost imagine the ghost literally stabbing his victim in the back. Such spirits could also take away the patient’s will to live.

“If his limbs are as quiet as those of a healthy person (but) he is silent and does not take any food, ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost (var: gh[o]st of someone burned to death).”⁷⁴

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

It is probable that the “murderous ghost” was in such bad sorts due to the fact that he himself was a victim of murder.

“If when (a confusional state) comes over him, his limbs go numb, his face seems to spin, his abdomen wastes away and whatever he puts to his mouth is always excreted all at once from his anus on the very same day, ‘hand’ of a ghost who died through murder.”⁷⁵

It should, therefore, come as no surprise that ghosts who drowned or otherwise died unpleasant deaths sometimes also behaved like “murderous” ghosts.

“If depression continually afflicts him (and) he makes supplication to whatever he sees, his limbs are hot and he sweats every day, he continually has a big appetite (and) until they bring him what he wants, he vomits (but) when they bring it to him he looks at it and does not eat it, the ‘hand’ of a ghost who [died] in the water [afflicts h]im.”⁷⁶

“[If] his left [arm]pit hurts him (but) he does not have a fever, the ‘double’ of a dead person afflicts him; he will die.”⁷⁷

This rule applied even to family ghosts, as may be seen from the following example.

“If his head, his body (and) the tip of his nose continually hurt him, [he bites his] lips, and he is continually depressed, among his relatives, the ghost of (one who) [died] of thir[st afflicts him].”⁷⁸

Of interest to modern psychiatrists is the fact that certain types of compulsive behavior seem to have been laid at the door of a guilty conscience.⁷⁹ Particularly noteworthy are the following afflictions by the ‘double’ of a person whom the victim has wronged.

“If he chews on his arms, he (the patient) had a person strangled to death and the ‘double’ of the dead person afflicts him.”⁸⁰

“If, during his illness, he talks continually, a ghost, the ‘double’ of a dead person afflicts him (but) he will get well.”⁸¹

“If he continually cries out: ‘my heart, my heart’ (and) gets up and runs, a ghost, the ‘double’ of a dead person [afflicts him].”⁸²

Sometimes, ghost prescriptions indicate that the ghost was not the actual initiator of the afflictions.

“If a person is chosen as a mate for a dead person and, as a result, a ghost afflicts him.”⁸³

“If a person continually sees dead persons, ‘hand’ of Ištar.”⁸⁴

“If ‘hand’ of ghost turns into AN.TA.ŠUB.BA, that person is sick from ‘hand’ of his city god.”⁸⁵

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

The first example was intended to counteract the machinations of sorcery. In the last cases, we are probably safe in assuming that the god whose “deputy” the ghost was sent him to plague a person at whom the god was angry.

Noises

Given the rarity of prescriptions designed specifically to combat the effects of hearing a ghost, one might suppose that aural encounters were infrequent, or at least not very serious. On the contrary, as we know from the omen series Šumma Ālu, to see or hear a ghost in one’s house was not merely traumatic for the individual concerned, but also portended disaster for him or his household. To avert this, it was necessary to perform an apotropaic ritual (NAM.BÚR.BI).⁸⁸

To judge from the number and frequency of references in Šumma Ālu, hearing a ghost was every bit as much to be dreaded, from an ominous point of view, as seeing one. For example, CT 38.26 contains twenty-five lines of omens relating to ghosts of which seventeen refer specifically to noises made by the ghost at various times and in various places,⁸⁹ another four⁹⁰ refer to ghosts entering people’s ears, and of the remaining lines, two⁹¹ refer to frightening, which might be caused by shrieks as well as by visions and only one unequivocally refers to seeing a ghost.⁹²

Our ghost prescriptions betray a similar concern for the ominous consequences of hearing ghosts. The one text which deals exclusively with the effects of hearing a ghost is a NAM.BÚR.BI,⁹³ whereas of all the prescriptions designed to combat apparitions, only one, which also mentions hearing the ghost, takes that form.⁹⁴ One is led to wonder from this whether there were any NAM.BÚR.BIS specifically concerned with seeing as opposed to hearing ghosts. One indication that there were not is to be found in the necromancy texts. There, the practice was to perform a NAM.BÚR.BI ritual if something went wrong.

“If (the ghost) is silent and does not remain stationary, [you perform] a NAM.BÚR.B[I].”⁹⁵

Since the problem was that the ghost was being seen and not heard, one might expect the NAM.BÚR.BI in question to refer to the evil portended by seeing a silent ghost. On the contrary, the NAM.BÚR.BIS quoted in full in necromancy texts explicitly refer to the evil portended by a ghost screaming in a person’s house!⁹⁶ This would seem to suggest that no NAM.BÚR.BI for visible but noiseless ghosts was to be found in the corpus.

Apparitions

Apparitions usually took the form of an encounter between the patient and “dead persons”: “if a dead person mee[ts] with a living person”⁹⁷ or “if a person continually sees dead persons.”⁹⁸ The legomena of apparition prescriptions also make mention of such encounters.

“Dead persons, why do you meet with me – those whose cities are tells (and) they are (nothing but) bones? I do not go to Kutha, assembling-place of ghosts;

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

why do you continually come after me?”⁹⁹

“The many dead persons who meet with NN son of NN or a dead person known to him who meets with him – so that he may not return and meet with NN, your servant, I will give him this. Let him receive (it) from me and so not return and not meet with NN, your servant.”¹⁰⁰

Note also that some prescriptions promise that, if the dromena are properly performed, “that person, for as long as he lives, will not see a dead person.”¹⁰¹

Sometimes, the prescriptions give a bit more detail as to the nature of this “meeting”. One label states: “recitation (to be used) if a dead person meets with a living person for evil purposes.”¹⁰² This qualification is necessitated by the fact that there were circumstances under which the living went to great lengths to meet with the dead, namely during the practice of necromancy. The prescriptions with which we are dealing are not concerned with this solicited form of apparition but with undesired encounters.

Another prescription specifies that it is to be used: “if a person continual[ly] sees [dead person]s, (either) one who is known to him or not kn[ow]n to him.”¹⁰³ Similarly, in the legomena: “The dead persons whom I know (and) many dead persons whom I do not know meet with me.”¹⁰⁴

Ghosts of relatives and strange ghosts belonged to different categories,¹⁰⁵ so it was helpful to know that this particular prescription was generic. Other prescriptions made it clear that they could be used globally by mentioning both known and unknown ghosts in the address to the haunting trouble maker.

“Whether he be (the ghost of my) father (or) mother, or brother (or) sister or the son of somebody or other or a roaming ghost with no one to care for him, a funerary offering has been made for him.”¹⁰⁶

There were also, as one might expect, prescriptions designed to be used exclusively against family ghosts¹⁰⁷ or exclusively against strange ghosts.¹⁰⁸

Some prescriptions specify that the ghost in question was seen while dreaming.¹⁰⁹

“[If a person] continually sees dead persons [in] his dreams . . .”¹¹⁰

“If a gh[ost afflicts] a person so that he continually sees dead persons (when he is) in his bed . . .”¹¹¹

Similarly, in legomena: “you must not return and mee[t] in a dream with NN, son of NN”¹¹² or “[NN son of NN whom a gh]ost afflicts so that it meet[s] with him while dreaming and awake.”¹¹³

Such encounters might be solicited either by a family or by a strange ghost. “(If) [his dreams are numerous], (and) he continually sees dead persons (in them but) he cannot [exactly remember the dreams (which) he] sees”¹¹⁴ might have been caused, due to variations which are unfortunately now lost to us, either by the fact that: “[the ghost] (of one) who was killed with a weapon (and) abandoned [in] the steppe afflicts him”¹¹⁵ or by “the ‘hand’ of his family ghost.”¹¹⁶

As many of these examples show, apparitions could result from the “affliction” of the patient by a ghost, a term quite frequently used, as we shall see, to describe the onset of physical symptoms. Alternatively, the appearing ghosts might have been sent by a god.

“If a person continually sees dead persons, ‘hand’ of Ištar.”¹¹⁷

The fact that a patient was seeing ghosts was not necessarily a bad sign.

“If (the patient is ill for a long time and then) he sees dead persons, (if you apply the appropriate remedy, he will get well).”¹¹⁸

Nonetheless, whatever the nature of the ghost, apparition texts were basically designed to prevent any further encounters between the dead and the living. Typical formulations are: “to keep him away so that he does not see him”;¹¹⁹ “to keep away the dead persons (whom he continually sees)”;¹²⁰ or simply “to keep (them) away.”¹²¹ In the legomena, the ghost is supposed to “leave (the patient) alone”,¹²² to “not return”,¹²³ to “not approach”,¹²⁴ or to distance himself.¹²⁵ Also note that a number of prescriptions promise that, if the dromena are properly performed, “dead persons will be kept away.”¹²⁶

As might be expected, apparitions were typically dealt with by means which we might prefer to regard as “magical”: libations, figurines or other surrogates, magic encirclement, and amulets. Put another way, a good percentage of all of these “magical” types of prescriptions, that is to say, seven of eight libation prescriptions,¹²⁷ seven of twenty-one figurine prescriptions,¹²⁸ one of three surrogate prescriptions,¹²⁹ one of six magic encirclement prescriptions,¹³⁰ and twenty-five out of seventy-four amulet prescriptions¹³¹ were designed to deal with apparitions.

What is less expected is that there were also seventeen salves¹³² and seven potions¹³³ for apparitions. Without exception, medicaments found in apparition potions appear also in potions for hurting insides,¹³⁴ a fact which suggests that these apparitions, at least, were visual hallucinations accompanying severe abdominal discomfort.

Physical Problems

The other major concern of texts designed to expel ghosts was the physical problems which ghosts were believed to cause. It should be noted that, in the following discussion (and the texts in Part II), translations of medical terminology and interpretations of disease entities are discussed and justified in J. Scurlock and B. Andersen, Diagnoses in Assyrian and Babylonian Medicine, to which the reader is referred.

The causing of physical problems by a ghost is usually expressed as “seizure” by the ghost or seizure by the “hand” of a ghost or simply as “hand” of ghost.¹³⁵ The use of this expression indicates that the ghost was imagined as physically taking hold of his victim. To avoid confusion with our own term “seizure”, however, I have (with a few exceptions) translated DIB (literally “seize”) as “afflict” and DIB-it (literally “seizure by”) as “affliction by”. The following are typical formulations.

“If a ghost afflicts a person (so that) ...”¹³⁶

“If a ghost afflicts a person and s[tay]s continuously in his body and can not [be

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

- dispelled] ...”¹³⁷
“If a ghost afflicts a person (and) continually pursues him ...”¹³⁸
“If ... affliction by a ghost.”¹³⁹
“If ... a ghost afflicts him.”¹⁴⁰
“If, as a result of affliction by a ghost ...”¹⁴¹
“If ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts a person (so that) ...”¹⁴²
“If ... ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts him.”¹⁴³
“If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost ...”¹⁴⁴
“(Such and such a procedure/so and so many plants, etc.) for ‘hand’ of ghost ...”¹⁴⁵
“If ... ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁴⁶
“If ... affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁴⁷
“(If you want to cure) a persistent attack of ‘hand’ of ghost¹⁴⁸ which the āśipu is not able to remove ...”¹⁴⁹
“If ‘hand’ of ghost stays continuously in a person’s body and can not be dispelled ...”¹⁵⁰
“If ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts a person and continually pursues him ...”¹⁵¹

More rarely, the ghost was said to “fall” on his victim¹⁵² or to “strike” him¹⁵³ or to make him sick.¹⁵⁴

Symptoms

Symptoms of affliction by a ghost range from the merely annoying to the gruesome.¹⁵⁵ It might be only a telltale rumbling of the insides that warned of the presence of a ghost,¹⁵⁶ but it was usually much more. Although symptoms are often localized, ghost prescriptions show that it was not the case, despite what is written in the general literature, that “each demon attack[ed] by preference [only] one part of the body”.¹⁵⁷

A number of prescriptions simply detail the patient’s symptoms and, if it were not for the diagnostic and prognostic series (TDP and parallels), we would not know that these had anything to do with ghosts. Thus, for example, several prescriptions have: “If the blood vessels of a person’s temple afflict him and his eyes contain blood”¹⁵⁸ and “If a person’s temples afflict him and his eyes contain blood”¹⁵⁹ with no mention of any ghost. An entry in the diagnostic and prognostic series, however, reveals that these are indeed the symptoms of ghost affliction: “If the blood vessels of his temple afflict him and his eyes contain blood, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁶⁰ Similarly, in therapeutic texts: “If a person’s temples afflict him and his eyes contain tears”¹⁶¹ and “If the blood vessels of a person’s right and his left temples (feel like they are) pulsating and both his eyes contain tears”¹⁶² but in the diagnostic and prognostic series: “If the blood vessels of his temple afflict him and his eyes contain tears, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁶³ Note also: “If a person’s ears roar”¹⁶⁴ and “If a ghost afflicts a person (so that) his ears roar.”¹⁶⁵

Head- or Neckaches (Plus)

One way a victim could be recognized was by severe and persistent pains in the head and/or neck.¹⁶⁶

“If a ghost afflicts a person so that he continually has a headache . . .”¹⁶⁷

“If a person’s temples afflict him and hurt him from sunrise to sunset, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁶⁸

“If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person continually experiences pulsating of the temples . . .”¹⁶⁹

“If a person has a headache and his neck muscles continually hurt him, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁷⁰

“If the muscles of a person’s neck hurt him, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁷¹

In some cases, these pains were accompanied by bloodshot or teary, swollen eyes.

“If the blood vessels of a person’s temple afflict him and his eyes contain blood . . .”¹⁷²

“If a person’s temples afflict him and his eyes contain tears . . .”¹⁷³

“If his temple afflicts him and his eye muscles continually hurt him, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁷⁴

“If a person’s temples afflict him and he gets hot (and then) cold (and) his eyes are swollen, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁷⁵

Particularly diagnostic were cases in which such symptoms occurred on only one side of the body.

“(The ghost) divides the right side and the left side of my body.”¹⁷⁶

The “hand” of ghost headache might also be accompanied by ringing/roaring in the ears or an aching body.

“[If a perso]n’s right and left temples (feel like they are) pulsating as in affliction by a ghost, his ears ring and [his eyes] are full of tears”¹⁸⁴

“If the middle of a person’s scalp (and) his temples continually hurt h[im] in-

tensely, (and) his ears roar . . .”¹⁸⁵

“If a person’s head continually stings him, <his head> roars, his ears ring, (and) his finger(s) sting him, that person (is afflicted with) affliction by a ghost.”¹⁸⁶

“If a headache bothers a person to an abnormal extent and something continually hurts him intensely all over, ‘hand’ of ghost, deputy of Ištar.”¹⁸⁷

“If from the middle of his scalp it hurts him intensely and his eyelids, his forehead, his face, his cheeks, his neck, his breast . . . his shins (and) his ankles all hurt him continually and (the pain) does not let up despite (lit.: in the face of) the āšipu (‘s efforts), a ghost afflicts him and [continually pursues him].”¹⁸⁸

Particularly alarming was headache accompanied by bleeding or intense internal pain.

“If the blood vessels of his temple afflict him and he also vomits blood, ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁸⁹

“If his temple afflicts him and he continually cries out: ‘my heart, my heart’, ‘hand’ of ghost, deputy of Ištar; he will die. Var: ‘hand’ of ghost; if it is prolonged, he will die.”¹⁹⁰

The victim might also experience numbness or paralysis or dizziness in addition to the head or neckache.

“If a person experiences pulsating of the temples and his hands and his feet go numb . . .”¹⁹¹

“If a person experiences pulsating of the temples and rimūtu-paralysis . . .”¹⁹²

“If a person continually has headaches, his ears roar, (and) his eyes become dimmed, his neck muscles continually hurt him, his arm(s) are continually numb, his kidney gives him a jabbing pain, his heart is troubled, (and) his feet continually have rimūtu-paralysis, a pursuing ghost continually pursues that person.”¹⁹³

“[If a m]an’s temples [afflict him and] his face seems continually to be spinning (and), [he gets up (from the bed) [but then] falls (back down again), ‘hand’ of ghost.]”¹⁹⁴

“If his face seems continually to be spinning, his ears roar (and) his temples give him jabbing pains and get him wet,¹⁹⁵ ‘hand’ of ghost.”¹⁹⁶

“[If, as a result of affliction] by ‘hand’ of ghost, a [person]’s neck hurts him, (and) his face seems continually to be spinning . . .”¹⁹⁷

Many of the symptoms accompanying a ghost headache were also, in and of themselves, evidence of a past encounter with a ghost. This was, for example, the case with flashes or ghost images in the eyes.

“If a person [sees] flashes in his eyes . . . a roving ghost of the wastes [afflicts him].”¹⁹⁸

“If ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts a person so that in his eyes (something which looks) like [a light] or like lightning . . . or like . . . or like a goat [is continually established, that person] ‘hand’ of ghos[t . . .] his eyes [. . .].”¹⁹⁹

Ghosts in the Ears

Ghosts also produced roaring, ringing, or hurting ears, as in the following examples.

“If a ghost afflicts a person (so that) his ears roar . . .”²⁰⁰

“If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person’s ears roar, (you use) the recitation (for cases where) his ears roar.”²⁰¹

“If a person’s ears continually ring . . .”²⁰³

“If it hurts a person and continually jabs him in his ears like  ‘hand’ of ghost . . .”²⁰⁴

“If his ears continually stand up, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²⁰⁵

Ghostly Pains

Aches and pains, particularly (but not exclusively) those which affected only one side of the body, were also laid at the door of ghosts.²⁰⁶

“[If ‘hand’ of ghost afflic]ts a person so that [his] left side continually hurts him intensely . . .”²⁰⁷

“[If] his left armpit²⁰⁸ hurts him (but) he does not have a fever, the ‘double’ of a dead person afflicts him; he will die.”²⁰⁹

“If a person has a needling pain and it need[les him] like needles, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²¹⁰

“If a ghost afflicts a person . . . you <continually> smear it on wherever it hurts him.”²¹²

“[If] a ghost afflicts a person (and) his heel is stiff, in order to relax [the muscles] of his heel and achilles’ tendon . . .”²¹²

“If both sides of his throat (look) bruised and continually hurt him, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²¹³

Ghosts in the Intestines

Other signs of ghost affliction were nausea and inability to eat, internal pain, flatulence, and colic with numbness and depression.

“[If a ghost afflicts a person] so that he vomits (and) cannot keep down (either) bread or beer, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²¹⁴

“If as a result of ‘hand’ of ghost, a person’s insides continually hurt him . . .”²¹⁵

“[If, as the result of] affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, [a person]’s epigastrium is hot; he has heartburn; (and) his epigastrium gnaws at him . . .”²¹⁶

“If a person’s face seems to spin (and) he says: ‘Oh, my insides!’, his insides rumble, his epigastrium continually protrudes (and) he loses his appetite for bread and beer . . .”²¹⁷

“If a person(’s) insides are continually bloated (and) his intestines continually make a <loud> noise like an išqippu, that person is sick with pent-up wind (and) ṣētu. If his attack is prolonged, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²¹⁸

“If he was wounded on his neck and his insides are continually cramped and his feet are raised up, affliction by a ghost.”²¹⁹

“[If a person’s in]sides are continually colicky, his palate continually gets dr[y], his [arms] are continually numb, he belches, he has plenty of appetite (for food), but when [he sees it], it does not please him; he wants a woman, but when he sees a woman, his heart does not rise in him; [his heart] is (too) depressed (for him) to speak, ‘hand’ of ghost is pursuing that person.”²²⁰

Numbness; Dizziness; Shortness of Breath

Ghosts also caused numbness or paralysis, vertigo, heart fluttering, and shortness of breath.

“Forty-one stones for ‘hand’ of ghost (and) numbness of the hands and feet.”²²¹

“If he has a stroke and either his right side or his left side is affected (and) his shoulder is not released, (but) he can straighten out his fingers (and) he can lift his hand and stretch it out (and) he can bend his foot and stretch it out again (and) he is not off his food or drink, affliction by a ghost of the steppe; recovery in three (days).”²²²

“[If a person’s] face seems continually to be spinning (and) he gets up from the bed [but then] falls (back down again), ‘hand’ of ghost.”²²³

“If his face seems continually to be spinning, his ears roar, (and) his limbs get tense, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²²⁴

“If his heart continually flutters, his epigastrium continually pulses rapidly (and) he continually stretches out his eyes toward the darkness, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²²⁵

“If his arms and knees continually become tired, all at once his heart flutters, his spittle flows (when he is) in [h]is b[ed], he incessantly becomes sluggish (and) continually has internal fever, sorcery afflicts that person (or) a ghost afflicts him.”²²⁶

“If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person(’s) face seems to spin and he is also continually short of breath (and) his breaths come in spasms as if he were thirsting for water, a roving (!) ghost has seized him in the steppe.”²²⁷

“If his breath is continually short like one who has just come up from the water, ‘hand’ of Dingirma[h] or the ‘hand’ of Ningizzida or the ‘hand’ of the ghost of one who [died] in the water [afflicts him].”²²⁸

Ghost Fever

Ghosts were also responsible for some types of fever, as in the following examples.

“(If his affliction always afflicts him in the evening and) fever keeps him awake from the evening watch till the middle watch of the night, affliction by a g[host].”²²⁹

“If . . . his hands and feet are hot and a cold sweat continually falls upon him as in affliction by a ghost . . .”²³⁰

“[If . . .] his buttocks [are] co[ld], ‘[hand]’ of ghost; his illness [. . .].”²³¹

“If his ears and the soles of his feet are cold at the same time, a ghost, one brought into the steppe, afflicts him.”²³²

“(If) . . . from his head to his feet, . . . chills continually fall upon him . . . ‘hand’ of Ištar (or) ‘hand’ of his family ghost.”²³³

Many of these passages are fragmentary, but the chills in question seem often to accompany confusional states²³⁴ and/or depression.²³⁵ Certain patterns of fever were also typical of a ghost.

“If his affliction always afflicts him in the evening, affliction by a ghost.”²³⁶

“If he is sick one day and well the next; the ghost of his father or mother afflicts him.”²³⁷

“If it flows over him for one or two days and afflicts him on the third day, affliction by a ghost.”²³⁸

Neurological Disorders

Ghosts were also responsible for various neurological disorders including confusional states (hayyaṭu) and falling spells (miqtu), some of which were fatal in outcome.

“If ‘hand’ of ghost turns into AN.TA.ŠUB.BA, that person is sick with ‘hand’ of his city god.”²³⁹

“If a ghost afflicts a person and, as a result, he gets hot and then cold, his confusional states are numerous and (one) is (always) nearby, he gets no rest day or night, (and) his cry is like the cry of a donkey/goat,²⁴⁰ <the ‘hand’ of> a strange ghost has seized him in the wasteland.”²⁴¹

“[If he continu]ally has falling spells and, on the same day, confusional state(s) come over him seven times one right after the other (and), when (the confusional state) has left him, it makes (him) feel better, ‘hand’ of a murderous (ghost); he will die.”²⁴²

“[I]f, it continually falls upon him like a falling spell (and) his eyes are full of blood (var. he opens and closes his eyes), his cheeks/[ja]ws have muscle spasms, his hands and his feet are stretched out, he flees at the approach of the āšipu (and) he can see the one who afflicts him, ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost.”²⁴³

“If ditto (and) the lower sides of the fingers of his hands are dark and he twists,

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

'hand' of ghost; he will die."²⁴⁴

"[If a person]'s [fac]e seems continually to be spinning, his flesh stings him, [hi]s [tears] flow so (copiously) that he cannot see, . . . his upper thighs shift constantly under him, . . . his feet become contorted, [his] head constantly hurts him, . . . his family ghost continually afflicts [him]."²⁴⁵

"[If] the person's [illness] sets upon him like the scepter of Sîn so that he bends his f[oot] and then stretches (it) out, (and if) he drones and spittle flows [from his mouth], a roving ghost has seized him in the steppe."²⁴⁶

"If a ghost afflicts a person, stays continu[ously] in (his) body [and can not be dispelled], and he continually has confusional states (caused by) a ghost²⁴⁷ . . . You make a figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost . . . On the left shoulder, you write its name: 'Figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost (or) evil sickness which afflicts NN, son of NN' . . . (You have him say) 'Samaš, this is the representation of the confusional state (causing) ghost; this is the representation of anything evil which exists in my body, my flesh, and my muscles, (which) presses my temples, continually makes my face seem to spin, dries up my palate, numbs my flesh, divides the right side and the left side of my body, goes continually after me, (and) sets about cutting my throat . . . he sought me out, looked for me; during the evening, midnight, and dawn watch, daily he caused me confusional states, made me twist, immobilized me, and made me sick; night and day he is set on me so that he continually pursues me . . . May he not return to cause me confusional states.' "²⁴⁸

Mental Disturbance; Odd Behavior

An annoying combination of desire and disinterest was an almost sure sign of affliction by a ghost.²⁴⁹

"If depression continually falls upon him (and) he makes supplication to whatever he sees, his limbs are hot and he sweats every day, he continually has a big appetite (and) until they bring him what he wants, he vomits (but) when they bring it to him he looks at it and doesn't eat it, the 'hand' of a ghost who [died] in the water [afflicts h]im."²⁵⁰

Ghost-induced depression sometimes shaded off into signs of mental disturbance including disorientation, chewing on lips or limbs, rubbing and hitting the face and screaming, babbling, and hallucinations.

"If his limbs are as quiet as those of a healthy person (but) he is silent and does not take any food, 'hand' of a murderous ghost (var: gh[o]st of someone burned to death)."²⁵¹

"If he is helpless and silent, ghosts [continually pursue] that patient."²⁵²

"[If] his [mentation] is altered so that he is not in full possession of his faculties, 'hand' of a ro[vi]ng ghost; he will die."²⁵³

"(If) his mentation is altered so that he wanders about without knowing (where

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

- he is) as in affliction by a ghost . . .”²⁵⁴
- “If his head, his body (and) the tip of his nose continually hurt him, [he bites his] lips, and he is continually depressed, among his relatives, the ghost of (one who) [died] of thir[st afflicts him].”²⁵⁵
- “If he rubs his face, the ghost (of one) who died in water afflicts him.”²⁵⁶
- “If he continually strikes his face and screams, the ghost of someone burned to death afflicts him.”²⁵⁷
- “If, during his illness, he talks continually, a ghost, the ‘double’ of a dead person afflicts him (but) he will get well.”²⁵⁸
- “If his headband seems to sting him, his ears roar, the hair of his head continually seems to stand on end, his whole body crawls as if there were lice but when he brings his hand up, there is nothing to scratch, ‘hand’ of ghost with dehydration,²⁵⁹ (if) the person (bends and stretches out) his feet as in the scepter of Sîn, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²⁶⁰
- “If in the evening, he sees either a living person or a dead person or . . . or anybody or anything and becomes afraid . . . his mouth is seized so that he is unable to cry out to one who s[le]eps next to him, ‘hand’ of ghost or ‘hand’ of . . .”²⁶¹

Short of an actual sighting of the ghost, the patient might also display signs of having been frightened.

“The frightening ghost who has been fastened to my back for many days and cannot be dispelled, (which) continually pursues me all day, frightens me continually by night, continually sets about pursuing me, <continually> stands the hair of my head on end,²⁶² presses my temple, continually makes my face seem to spin, dries up my palate, <numbs my flesh, (and) dries up my whole body>.”²⁶³

Living Skeletons

Last but by no means least, ghosts “robbed” their victims of their flesh,²⁶⁴ causing them to dry up or waste away, and transforming them into living skeletons.²⁶⁵

- “If he continually asks for more and more water (but) his temperature is even, the blood-vessels of his hands ‘go’ (and) he groans from the beginning of the night till the middle of the watch, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²⁶⁶
- “If when a confusional state come over him, his limbs waste away (and) his abdomen continually afflicts him (and) the bowels are continually loose, ‘hand’ of ghost.”²⁶⁷
- “If a person’s neck is paralyzed and his neck muscle(s) are stiff (and) distended, he continually has headaches, again and again his nostrils are ‘seized’ (and) hot (and) he continually has wasting away of the flesh, ‘hand’ of [gho]st afflicts that person.”²⁶⁸

Parameters of Ghost Affliction

That there was some common ground between ghost ailments and other illnesses may be seen from the fact that in some cases the āšipu seems to have been unsure whether he had a case of “hand” of ghost or one of the following alternative diagnoses: “hand” of god;²⁶⁹ “hand” of Ningizzida;²⁷⁰ “hand” of Ištar,²⁷¹ “lubāṭu-illness (or) ‘hand’ of Mardu[k]”;²⁷² (or) the ‘scepter of Sîn’ ”;²⁷³ or “hand” of god and goddess.²⁷⁴

As is explained more fully in Scurlock and Anderson, Diagnoses in Assyrian and Babylonian Medicine, the approach of the āšipu to diagnosis was to begin by observing patients’ symptoms, to group symptoms into syndromes, and then to assign the syndromes to causal agents. What ghosts do not seem to have done was to cause any “women’s” troubles – barrenness, excessive vaginal discharges, difficulty giving birth, puerperal fever and the like, or infantile afflictions,²⁷⁵ or jaundice, gall bladder, urinary tract problems or DÚR.GIG. Intestinally speaking, ghosts made gas and caused internal pain, but do not seem to have caused constipation or the like. As far as the lungs were concerned, only “shortness of breath” is mentioned in connection with ghosts, not any of the various varieties of cough. Eye problems blamed on ghosts, apart from bloodshot or teary, blurred eyes accompanying other symptoms, are confined to sparks or “ghost” images (that is, to cases where the vision was not simply impaired by clouding, opaque spots, blood clots etc. but the patient actually “saw” something which was not there). Victims of ghost affliction did not have to worry about having sore or strained eyes. Nobody with a toothache or excessive salivation seems to have supposed that he was being pestered by a ghost. Neither do they seem to have been held responsible for skin diseases (ringworm, rashes, etc.) or strokes (except where there was only a partial and very temporary paralysis). Neither, despite their propensity for standing the hair on end, is baldness ever blamed on ghosts.

What set ghost diseases apart was the presence of one or all of the following: persistent, intense or one-sided pain, roaring or ringing or sharp pains in the ears, dehydration and mental disturbances, particularly nightmares or hallucinations. So, for example, ghosts were held responsible for Bornholm disease (intense pain), migraine and sciatica (one-sided pain), ear infections and meningoencephalitis (roaring in the ears), battle fatigue (nightmares) and cholera (dehydration). Syndromes once assigned to ghosts in turn suggested other symptoms for possible inclusion. The most striking example of this process is alcoholism which includes all of the characteristic symptoms of ghost affliction, adding also respiratory distress, ketoacidosis (ghosts in the intestines), and withdrawal seizures.

Most of the diseases or conditions caused by ghosts were treatable, but not all.²⁷⁶ Ruptured cerebral aneurisms are intensely painful, hence ghostly, but also fatal.

“If his temple afflicts him so that (he continually cries out), the blood vessels of his temple seem to pulsate greatly (and) the top of his head (feels like it was) cut open, “hand” of ghost.”²⁷⁷

The same was true of other syndromes caused by ghosts, including alcoholism and shock gangrene.

Symptoms of Ghostly Affliction

“If his temple afflicts him and (he continually cries out: ‘my insides, my insides’), he vomits a lot and cannot stand the bed, ‘hand’ of ghost; he will die.”²⁷⁸

“[If] his left armpit hurts him (but) he does not have a fever, the ‘double’ of a dead person afflicts him; he will die.”²⁷⁹

“If he was wounded on his spine and he is stopped up so that his excrement cannot come out,²⁸⁰ ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost; [he will die].”²⁸¹

“[If he continu]ally has falling spells and, on the same day, confusional state(s) come over him seven times one right after the other (and), when (the confusional state) has left him, it makes (him) feel better, ‘hand’ of a murderous (ghost); [he will die].”²⁸²

“If ditto (and) the lower sides of the fingers of his hands are dark and he twists, ‘hand’ of ghost; he will die.”²⁸³

Most variants of ghost affliction, however, were expected to respond to treatment. The goal of the healer in such cases was “to save him”²⁸⁴ or “to cure him”.²⁸⁵ These texts predict that the patient will recover or get well²⁸⁶ and that the ghost will be removed²⁸⁷ or kept away²⁸⁸ and will not return to hurt him intensely.²⁸⁹

In sum, ancient Mesopotamian ghosts were a great deal more obnoxious than their modern counterparts. Although they certainly did their share of making spooky noises and scaring people half to death, what made them so dreadful was the wide variety of medical symptoms which they were capable of producing. If, therefore, the āšipu wished to deal successfully with “hand” of ghost, he had to be prepared to apply what we might term “medicine” to treatable cases. It should, therefore come as no surprise that, as we shall see in future chapters, the prescriptions for dealing with ghosts are as likely to contain instructions for the preparation and administration of medicaments in the form of bandages, salves, and potions as they are to require the performance of libations or the manufacture of figurines accompanied by offerings and recitations.

TIME AND PLACE OF PERFORMANCE OF RITUAL CURES

Time

The shortest of ghost prescriptions might take anywhere from a few minutes (assuming the basic ingredients were available) to a few hours. Several of the more overtly “magical” prescriptions, however, require an overnight wait²⁹⁰ and, in many of the figurine prescriptions, one of the salves, and one of the NAM.BÚR.BI’s, at least three days were needed to perform the full ritual.²⁹¹ This length of time is unusual for a NAM.BÚR.BI, but by no means out of line when compared with the “medical” prescriptions. The ancient Mesopotamians were not inclined to be overly hasty where medicine was concerned, and were prepared to keep administering medicaments for as long as a month before a cure was finally effected.²⁹²

Taking exactly three days to manufacture and bury a figurine is easily explicable in “magical” terms (compare directions to recite recitations three times or to tie seven and seven knots for an amulet). The overnight wait, on the other hand, is as likely to have been inspired by the technique of decocting ingredients for potions, salves and the like, a technique not uncommonly employed in ghost prescriptions.²⁹³ Contrary to what one might suppose, leaving ingredients out “under the stars” is not necessarily a purely “magical” exercise, although there is no reason to doubt that the stars were given credit for the success of the decoction.²⁹⁴ It should be noted that, in ghost prescriptions, a night spent under the stars is invariably required when the decoction is made in water or oil, but not when it is made in wine or beer. There is thus good reason to suppose that the reason for waiting so long was to ensure that the ingredients melded properly before the medicine was used.

Most ghost prescriptions give no indication as to what day might be appropriate for a performance.²⁹⁵ One, however, specifies mid-month (the fifteenth).²⁹⁶ The day was apparently chosen because, on that day, “Šîn and Šamaš stand together,”²⁹⁷ making it possible to enlist the twin gods in magically encircling the patient.²⁹⁸ The other propitious time for performing an expulsion, especially when the ghosts causing the trouble happened to be ghosts of the victim’s family, was the period from the twenty-seventh to the twenty-ninth of Abu, or in the vicinity of the day when the dead returned to receive food offerings.²⁹⁹ Otherwise, one presumes that remedies were administered whenever the need arose, that is whenever the patient began to display ghostly symptoms.

When performing a burial of a figurine, it was often recommended to begin the central procedure in the late afternoon.³⁰⁰ Given that the sungod Šamaš was “lord of the ghosts”, what more appropriate time to be sending ghosts down to the Netherworld than at the end of the day with the setting sun? By contrast, salves and potions were best administered first thing in the morning,³⁰¹ this perhaps at least partly for medical reasons, since even today certain drugs are best taken on an empty stomach.

Place

The place of performance is rarely indicated in the texts. A clearing for the ritual might be made in the steppe, in a secluded place,³⁰² or at a canal bank³⁰³ or the patient might be instructed to bathe himself at a crossroads.³⁰⁴ The roof of the patient's house³⁰⁵ was a good location for longer rituals since it could thus be guaranteed that the ritual paraphernalia would not be disturbed. Once, the clay pit is said to be in the patient's house,³⁰⁶ perhaps for similar reasons. When a pit needed to be dug for a burial, it would be in the steppe³⁰⁷ or at a canal bank³⁰⁸ or in the shade of a thornbush.³⁰⁹ In three cases, figurines were sent down a river in a sailboat.³¹⁰ In one case, a figurine was immured in the drainage hole of a wall,³¹¹ and in another four figurines were put to rest in the family grave.³¹² A libation could be poured out in a tavern as part of the dissociative actions at the end of a ritual.³¹³ Finally, waste land was an obvious place to dispose of remains.³¹⁴ Otherwise, the healing rite presumably took place in the patient's house. I say presumably, because the diagnostic series used by āšipu seems to have assumed that the healer would typically go to visit the patient, rather than the other way round.³¹⁵

In sum, with the exception of special circumstances which required specific times and places of performance as detailed above, ghost prescriptions seem not to have stood out particularly from prescriptions designed for medical problems which were not caused by ghosts. That is to say, that the typical ghost prescription was probably administered in the patient's house after the āšipu had confirmed that the patient had developed the requisite symptoms.

Chapter 4

LEGOMENA

Division of Labor between Healer and Patient

In all, seventy of the three hundred and fifty-two ghost prescriptions contained instructions as to the exact words which were to be recited either by the āšipu or the patient, or, in some cases, by each in turn. Most (58)³¹⁶ of these recitations were in Akkadian; a smaller number (23)³¹⁷ were written in what is often virtually incomprehensible Sumerian and the remaining (8)³¹⁸ are either mangled Hurrian, or nonsense syllables or some obscure, and presumably equally mangled, non-Mesopotamian language,³¹⁹ no doubt an attempt to communicate with Netherworld denizens in their own special “language”. A small number of the Akkadian recitations³²⁰ also read as if they had been translated from poorly understood Sumerian.

Once through was sufficient for most utterances, but repeating the set text three³²¹ or seven times³²² served to reinforce its efficacy.³²³ In the passages in which it is clearly indicated which person is supposed to recite, it is always the patient who delivers personal appeals to the gods for help,³²⁴ and the āšipu who is responsible for reciting appeals which refer to the patient in the third person.³²⁵ This being the expected division of labor, we may safely presume that, even in cases in which the speaker is ambiguously marked,³²⁶ personal appeals were intended to be delivered by the patient, whereas the appearance of a place for the patient’s name to be inserted is a sign of intended recitation by the āšipu.³²⁷

The situation with the administration of ritual oaths is rather more complicated. What I am here calling “ritual oath formulae” are conventionally interpreted as “conjurations”. The phrases conventionally translated: “you are conjured/I have conjured you by such and such a god” are here translated: “you are made to swear/I have made you swear by such and such a god”. To “conjure”, according to the Oxford English Dictionary, is “to call upon, constrain a devil or spirit to appear to do one’s bidding by the invocation of some sacred name or the use of some sacred ‘spell’ ” or, according to Webster, “to summon a demon, spirit, etc., by a magic spell.”³²⁸

Since the object of the exercise in ghost-expelling rituals was not to summon an absent ghost or “constrain him to appear”, but quite the contrary to get rid of one which was already physically present, “conjure” is hardly appropriate. What is contemplated, as the use of the D-stem of the verb *tamû*³²⁹ shows, is that the ghost is being compelled to swear an oath, to be enforced by the invoked gods, that he will go away and leave his erstwhile victim in peace.³³⁰

When the central procedure was a libation performed by the patient, the patient seems to have been the one to administer the ritual oath.³³¹ In figurine prescriptions, where the central procedure was performed by the healer, it was usually the healer who administered the ritual oath over the burial or other “send off” for the ghost.³³² When,

however, a recitation was made over the figurine as it was presented to Šamaš, the patient was not infrequently the one to deliver it³³³ and, in a few cases, such recitations contained ritual oath formulae.³³⁴ Since, in other texts, the healer seems to have typically both performed the central rite and delivered the recitation, it seems most likely that he was the one to administer the rare example of a ritual oath in other prescriptions.³³⁵

In most cases, there was only one recitation, delivered by the *āšipu*³³⁶ or, less commonly, by the patient.³³⁷ In others, two or more recitations were delivered by the patient,³³⁸ or by the *āšipu*³³⁹ or alternated between them.³⁴⁰ It was considerably more likely that the patient would be called upon to recite in some types of procedures than in others. Of the recitations delivered by the patient, two occur in NAM.BÚR.BI's,³⁴¹ eleven in libations,³⁴² thirteen in figurines,³⁴³ and five in magic encirclement prescriptions.³⁴⁴ By contrast, only one accompanies an amulet³⁴⁵ and one a suppository.³⁴⁶ Divided up another way, two were used to treat ghostly screams,³⁴⁷ seven were for headaches (plus),³⁴⁸ one for inflammation(?) of the ears,³⁴⁹ ten for neurological disorders or mental disturbance³⁵⁰ and the remaining seventeen for apparitions.³⁵¹

Relationship Between Legomena and Dromena: General Remarks

Of the fifty-eight Akkadian recitations, two appear in NAM.BÚR.BI's,³⁵² and another twenty-three in prescriptions for apparitions.³⁵³ Seven were directed against headaches (plus),³⁵⁴ five were used to treat roaring or inflammation(?) in the ears,³⁵⁵ three were for ghostly pains,³⁵⁶ and fourteen were used to treat neurological disorders or mental disturbance.³⁵⁷ The remaining four were used to treat unspecified ailments.³⁵⁸

Of the twenty-three Sumerian or bilingual recitations, six appear in prescriptions for apparitions.³⁵⁹ Five were directed against headaches (plus),³⁶⁰ three were used to treat roaring in the ears,³⁶¹ two were for ghostly pains,³⁶² two were used to treat ghosts in the intestines,³⁶³ one was for numbness,³⁶⁴ and one was used to treat neurological disorders.³⁶⁵ The remaining three were used for unspecified ailments.³⁶⁶ Of the eight "Subarean"³⁶⁷ recitations, seven were used to treat roaring in the ears.³⁶⁸ The remaining one accompanied a salve for ghostly pains.³⁶⁹

It would appear from this that recitations were used for apparitions, headaches (plus), ear problems, ghostly pains, numbness and neurological disorders but not, with one exception, for eye, lung or stomach problems caused by ghosts. It is hard not to suppose from this distribution that the decision when to use a recitation and when not to was at least partly based on the probability that the ghost would be in a position to overhear what was being said. (I say overhear because, in many instances, it is a helpful god and not the troublesome ghost who is actually being addressed.)

As might be expected, recitations were also considerably more likely to occur in some types of prescriptions than in others. Two out of two NAM.BÚR.BI's, eight out of eight libations, at least eighteen³⁷⁰ out of twenty-one figurines, two out of three surrogates and six out of six magic encirclement prescriptions contained recitations. By contrast, only fourteen out of seventy-three amulets (four of them knotting prescriptions), ten out of sixty-six fumigants, seven out of thirteen suppositories, eight out of seventy-seven salves, one out of thirty-two potions, and none of the forty-one bandages or eighteen washes was accompanied by legomena.³⁷¹

The recitation, (or the primary recitation if there was more than one) was delivered over the key element in the ritual. For the figurine manipulation texts, this was the figurine, which was raised up³⁷² or formally presented to the gods³⁷³ or set up in some way³⁷⁴ or ritually buried³⁷⁵ while the recitation was delivered. In some cases, a secondary recitation was delivered over the figurine³⁷⁶ or over a reed torch³⁷⁷ or over a supplementary libation³⁷⁸ or over the burial³⁷⁹ or as part of the final dissociative actions.³⁸⁰ In the libation prescriptions, the primary recitation was usually³⁸¹ delivered by the patient while lifting up the libation vessel.³⁸² In one case, the āšipu lifted up the libation vessel while the patient recited.³⁸³ Supplemental recitations were delivered before commencing the rite³⁸⁴ or over the libation vessel,³⁸⁵ or in connection with dissociative rites completing the dromena.³⁸⁶

When amulet preparation prescriptions contained a recitation, it was delivered over the amulet.³⁸⁷ Similarly, with fumigants,³⁸⁸ salves,³⁸⁹ potions,³⁹⁰ and suppositories.³⁹¹ In the knot-tying prescriptions, the recitation was delivered as each knot was tied.³⁹² In magic encirclement prescriptions, the recitations framed the arrangement of the magic encirclement³⁹³ or, in a few cases, served to form it.³⁹⁴ In the NAM.BÚR.BI's, the recitations accompanied the offerings.³⁹⁵

Akkadian Recitations

The recitations in Akkadian can be divided into two broad categories: prayers to gods asked to help in the proceedings³⁹⁶ and addresses to the ghost or ghosts causing the problems.³⁹⁷ The latter usually consist of ritual oath formulae, with or without a short introduction,³⁹⁸ and orders to the ghost to make himself scarce.³⁹⁹

Elements not Specific to Ghost Rituals: Ritual Oath Formulae

In ritual oath formulae,⁴⁰⁰ a whole host of gods and natural forces were asked for assistance in ensuring that the troublesome spirit who was being subjected to the oath kept his word, took whatever was offered to him, and went his way. Several fairly lengthy examples are to be found in ghost prescriptions.

“I have made you swear (by) heaven and earth, (by) [Anu] and Antu, (by) Ellil and Ninlil, I have made you swear (by) Šin, Šamaš and Adad, valiant gods. I have made you swear (by) (tuttubu-style) c[loa]k, (by) incense and flour. I have made you swear (by) [. . . (by canebrake(?)) and s[w]amp, (by) the lowlands by the river and (by) well – be far away, be far away, [be distant, be distant! May you keep] your distance. Should the south wind blow, you all shall n[ot be blown to me]. (Should) [the north]h [wind] (blow), you all shall n[ot] be blown to me. (Should) [the north]h [wind] (blow), [you all shall not be blown to me.] (Should) the west wind (blow), [you all shall not be blown to me.]⁴⁰¹ Be far away, be] far away, be distant, be distant!”⁴⁰²

“(By) the lord of gods have I made you swear, (by) Duri (and) Dari, (by) Laḥmu (and) Laḥamu, (by) Alala (and) Belili, (by) shade, (by) daylight, (by) magic heaps of flour, (by) blazing Girra, (by) pure Nusku, (by) Šîn, lord of the crown, (by) Šamaš, judge of truth, I have made you swear by catch water and wadi; by mountains (and) rivers, are you made to swear. (By) . . . , (by) . . . of the torch of the luminary Šîn . . . , (by) Šakkan . . . desirous of plum trees(?), (by) Ebiḥ, bolt of the lands, are you made to swear. (By) the lord of gods have I made you swear. May you be loosed; may you be removed; may you be removed.”⁴⁰³

The object of these lists was apparently to get as many divine guarantors as possible, but there is a discernible pattern of enlisting the forces of heaven (as represented by the triad Ea, Šamaš and Marduk) on the one hand and the forces of the earth (as represented by various primordial and/or Netherworld gods, mountains, rivers etc.) on the other.

“(By) the king, you are made to swear. <(By) the king, you are made to swear.> (By) the great exalted lord, king of the gods, Marduk, you are made to swear. Release! Evil, you must not approach!”⁴⁰⁴

“You are made to swear by Abatu the queen, by Ereškigal, ditto, by Ningeštinanna, the scribe of the gods, whose stylus is (made of) lapis (and) carnelian.”⁴⁰⁵

“(Šamaš), let him be put under your oath; let him be put under the oath of Ea and Asalluḫi.⁴⁰⁶ <Let him be put under [the oath of the go]ds [of heaven and earth].>⁴⁰⁷ Let him not come near me; let him not come close to me; [let him not approach me]; let him not reach me. May he cross the river. May he go across the mountain. [May he withdraw 3,600 double] hours’ distance from my body; may he go up like smoke to heaven.”⁴⁰⁸

Similarly, when the patient wished to curse the ghost, he asked the assistance of many different gods in achieving his aim. The last curse in the list is particularly incongruous.

“Let Šamaš, the king of justice, overthrow [you the gho]st. [Le]t the wisest of the gods, Marduk, lead (you) away. [Let] Ningeštinanna, . . . [May she not let you drink col]d water from a pipe (laid in) the earth. [Let] Ningizzida, chair bearer of the broad Netherworld, . . . [Let Usmū], sukkallu-official of Eridu, lead (you) away. . . . , [female] herald, foremost of the . . . [Let . . .] lord of the weapon – [cut] your throat.”⁴⁰⁹

Prayers

As a general rule, ancient Mesopotamian prayers to gods consisted of epithets, appeals for help or pity from the god, requests for justice in the form of a solution to the problem at hand, and promises of gratitude.⁴¹⁰ In this regard, the prayers embedded in ghost prescriptions are hardly unconventional. Witness such passages as the following.

“To my left is Sîn, moon crescent of the great heavens. To my right is the father of the black headed ones, Šamaš, the judge, both gods, fathers of the great gods, makers of decisions for the widespread people . . . I am truly grieved, confused and troubled. <I kneel?> for your judgment; save me so that I may not be wronged.”⁴¹¹

“Girra, you are mighty, you are furious. [You make] gods and malku-demons [go aright]. You decide the case of the wronged man and woman. Stand forth [at my case] and, like the hero Šamaš, [set]tle my case; make a decision about me. Remove [the evil ghost] from my body so that I may praise your great godship.”⁴¹²

“Ea, king who created mankind, Šamaš, judge who makes the teeming people go aright, Marduk, exorcist of the gods, noble god, those who have been angry with me for some time . . . I have cried out to you, great gods – you, for your part, stand by me and hear what I have to say. (My) god and goddess who have been angry with me for some time; on this day, let them stand before you; let them come to be at peace with me. Ea, (it is) your magic; Šamaš, (it is) your magical practice; let it be kept away by your incantation.”⁴¹³

“Now, in the presence of your great godship I . . . day and night. . . . Šamaš, <on this day> saving is established before you. Ea and Asalluḫi sent me to you. I came for (you) to give (me) life. Give me my life. Pronounce my soul’s life.”⁴¹⁴

“[The . . . of the] widespread [heavens(?)], light of the Netherworld – Šamaš the judge; mighty [lord, Ea, one in whom] Eridu [tr]usts; sagest in the universe, Marduk, the powerful, [lor]d of the Eengurra; Ea, Šamaš, (and) Marduk – help me so that I may prosper with your assent . . . [Ea, Šamaš], and Marduk, help me . . . so that those who see me may praise you . . . I have turned to you – give me life.”⁴¹⁵

Usually these sections are brief; many of the prayers contain nothing other than a few divine epithets.⁴¹⁶ In only two cases, both involving a patient suffering from neurological disorders, are the prayers particularly long winded.

“Powerful, exalted lord, light of the lands, foremost of the gods, judge of truth, who makes the people go aright, who explores the (four) quarters, judge of the things above, who makes the things below go aright, king of heaven and earth, lord of the fates, unbribable judge, one who makes mankind go aright, your counsel is more pre-eminent than the Igigi; you keep an eye on the wicked and evil as they deserve; (from) the zenith to the horizon, your shining brilliance is let loose; you destroy the evil, the bad, the enemy; you rise and control all the lands from the sky and your net catches the evil ones; you open the gate of the widespread earth; you make the light shine; you make a clear verdict for the Anunnaki; you assign lots to the Igigi; Šamaš, your torch covers the lands; at your emergence, the universe lies ever silent and all people seek you out and

... you. Lord, in the midst of the pure heavens, look firmly upon me and accept my supplications. I, NN, son of NN, whose personal god is NN (and) whose personal goddess is NN, who is sick with illness; and you, O god, know (what it is) but I do not know (it) and nobody (else) knows (it).”⁴¹⁷

“Šamaš, noblest of the Anunnaki, lordliest of the Igigi; august leader, ruler of the people, judge of heaven and earth, whose command is unalterable, Šamaš, who keeps the darkness in order (and) who establishes light for the people, Šamaš, at your setting, the light of mankind diminishes; Šamaš, at your rising, the regions brighten; the homeless girl, the widow, the waif and the female companion – all mankind warms itself at your emergence; the wild animals, living creatures, beasts of the steppe, continually bring you their lives and limbs. You decide the case of the wronged man and woman; you make their decisions go aright. I am NN, son of NN; I kneel in exhaustion. ... Šamaš, you are the judge and I have brought you my life. I kneel for judgment of the case concerning the sickness which afflicts me. Judge my case; make a decision about me. Until you cause my case to be decided, you shall [n]ot give [a decision] for [any other] case. After you have caused my case to be decided, (and after) my obligation has let me go (and) fled [from] my [bo]dy, wherever I put my trust, let (those) gods come to agree with what you say. [May the heavens be pleased with] you; may the earth rejoice in you.”⁴¹⁸

Elements Specific to Ghost Rituals: Addresses to Relevant Gods

However conventional Akkadian ghost prescription prayers may be, it would be unfair to characterize them as “generic” or “scissors-and-paste” efforts. The gods to whom appeal was made in Akkadian ghost prescription recitations seem to have been chosen for their appropriateness to context. Thus, for example, the only Akkadian recitation which mentions the fire god Girra⁴¹⁹ is attached to the only prescription which includes a reed torch,⁴²⁰ the object being not merely to frighten the ghost,⁴²¹ but also to render the victim justice.⁴²² Similarly, the only Akkadian recitation to address the moon god Šin⁴²³ is one which was timed to coincide with the fifteenth of the month “when Šin and Šamaš stand together.”⁴²⁴ Ea⁴²⁵ and Marduk/Asalluḫi⁴²⁶ quite apart from being effective divinities,⁴²⁷ were renowned for their wisdom and their patronage of good magic,⁴²⁸ attributes which made them suitable for appeal in any magical context. In ghost prescriptions, they usually appear in combination with Šamaš,⁴²⁹ who is the most frequently solicited divinity.

This is for the simple reason that Šamaš, as god of the sun, was closely associated with both sky and Netherworld;⁴³⁰ by day he crossed the sky, while at night he traveled through the underworld. He was thus an obvious ally against beings who had left their resting places under the earth to come up and trouble the living. In many cases, this dual role of Šamaš was emphasized in the epithets chosen to describe the god. He was the “king of heaven and earth”⁴³¹ simultaneously in charge of the “things above” and the “things below”⁴³² and “lord of the dead”⁴³³ as well as “leader of the living”⁴³⁴ and “lord of the fates”⁴³⁵ who brought light into the darkness.⁴³⁶ Also mentioned is the sun god’s relationship to the steppe, the haunt of roving ghosts.⁴³⁷

Šamaš was a great god for whom no ghost, however terrifying, could possibly prove a match. He was a “hero”⁴³⁸ and “august leader, ruler of the people”⁴³⁹ as well as “powerful, exalted lord . . . foremost of the gods”.⁴⁴⁰ He was also the god of justice from whom compassion and fair settlement of any quarrel between the dead and the living could be expected.⁴⁴¹ However tightly the ghost clung to his victim, Šamaš could pry him loose⁴⁴² and however free wheeling the ghost, Šamaš could keep him in check.⁴⁴³

References to Ghost-Induced Problems

In NAM.BÚR.BI’s, libation, figurine or other surrogate and magic encirclement prescriptions, the afflictions brought on by the ghost and the hoped for remedy from the god are often laid out in some detail; indeed, it is not uncommon for the legomena to reveal as much or more about the specific use for which the prescription was intended than its label or introductory section.

One might expect this when the recitation consisted of a direct appeal to the ghost or address to a surrogate as in the following examples.

“Dead persons, why do you meet with me – those whose cities are tells (and) they are (nothing but) bones? I do not go to Kutha, assembling-place of ghosts; why do you continually come after me?”⁴⁴⁴

This is labelled “recitation (to be used when) one continually sees dead persons.”⁴⁴⁵

“You must not return and must not make the rounds (anywhere) i[n] the world. You must not return and must not mee[t] in a dream with NN, son of NN . . . You must be distant from the body of NN son of NN; you must depart; you must go away.”⁴⁴⁶

The introductory section to this prescription is not preserved, but is probably to be restored: “If a person [continually sees dead persons].”⁴⁴⁷

“The evi[l confusional stat]e (causing ghost or) mukīl rēš lemutti-demon [which] was set [on] NN son of NN – he is your husband. You are given [t]o him (as wife).”⁴⁴⁸

All that the introductory section tells us is that this was to be used “If a ghost afflicts a person.”⁴⁴⁹

“Ghost (or) whatever is evil – from this day forward, you are extracted from the body of NN son of NN; you are expelled; you are driven away and banished. The god who put you in place, the goddess who put you in place – they have removed you from the body of NN, son of NN, the patient.”⁴⁵⁰

The introductory section indicates that this was to be used “If a ghost afflicts a person (and) continually pursues him or an alû-de[mon or a gallû-demon] or a mukîl rēš lemutti-demon afflicts him or anything evil continual[ly] afflicts him or [pursues(?) him].”⁴⁵¹

Akkadian prayers to gods are just as likely to contain such explicit references. This is especially true of prescriptions involving ghostly screams or apparitions.

“(Šamaš), the ghost which cried out in my house . . . may the evil (portended by) his cry go off after him. May the [e]vil (portended by) his cry of evil not approach me.”⁴⁵²

The introductory section specifies that this prescription is to be used “in order to avert the evil (portended by) a ghost’s cry.”⁴⁵³

“Šamaš, the evil ghost whom you know but (whom) I do not know shall not approach me; he shall not come near me, he shall not come close to me; keep him from coming.”⁴⁵⁴

The other recitation in this text is labelled: “Recitation (to be used when) one continually sees dead persons.”⁴⁵⁵

“[As for NN whom a gh]ost afflicts so that it meet[s] with him while dreaming and awake [. . .]”⁴⁵⁶

The introductory section indicates that this prescription is to be used “If a dead person [meets] with a living person.”⁴⁵⁷

“(Šamaš), the many dead persons who meet with NN son of NN or a dead person known to him who meets with him – so that he may not return and meet with NN, your servant, I will give him this. Let him receive (it) from me and so not return and not meet with NN, your servant.”⁴⁵⁸

The introductory section specifies that this prescription is indeed to be used “if a person continually sees dead persons.”⁴⁵⁹

“(Šamaš), a ghost (or) mukîl rēš lemutti which was set on me and so continually pursues me – I am continually frightened and terrified (about him) – he continually sets about oppressing and murdering me . . . entrust him to his family ghost(s).”⁴⁶⁰

This is labelled “recitation (to be used when) one continually sees dead persons.”⁴⁶¹

“Šamaš, the dead persons who were set on me and so are seen . . . let them receive this and leave me alone.”⁴⁶²

There is no label or introductory section for this text; however the dromena end with:

“If he pours out donkey urine from an ox hoof to the [gho]st who meets with the person, dead persons will be kept away.”⁴⁶³

Even complicated symptoms were not infrequently echoed by explicit references in the recitations to the damage done by the unfriendly ghost.⁴⁶⁴

“Šamaš, this is the representation of the confusional state (causing) ghost; this is the representation of anything evil which exists in my body, my flesh, and my muscles, (which) presses my temples, continually makes my face seem to spin, dries up my palate, numbs my flesh, divides the right side and the left side of my body, goes continually after me, (and) sets about cutting my throat . . . he sought me out, looked for me; during the evening, midnight, and dawn watch, daily he caused me confusional states, made me twist, immobilized me, and made me sick; night and day he is set on me so that he continually pursues me . . . May he not return to cause me confusional states.”⁴⁶⁵

The introductory section specifies that this prescription is to be used “If a ghost afflicts a person, stays continu[ously] in (his) body [and can not be dispelled], and he continually has confusional states (caused by) a ghost [. . .]”⁴⁶⁶ and, in two versions, the recitation is labelled: “Recitation to remove confusional states (caused by) a ghost”.⁴⁶⁷ The figurine’s name is also “Figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost (or) evil sickness which afflicts NN, son of NN.”⁴⁶⁸

“A ghost continually gives [me] confusional states. A ghost brings illness upon me. A ghost afflicts me. A ghost continually pursues me. A ghost can not be dispelled from my body. ‘They’ consume all my flesh for me. The muscles of my limbs ‘they’ paralyze. ‘Th[ey]’ stand continually by my head. ‘They’ continually . . . my . . . ‘They’ hold hardship in store for me. [(. . .)] A ghost was set on me so as to consume me. . . . you shall not come near my [bo]dy again. You are expelled (and) dr[iven out].”⁴⁶⁹

The introductory section states that this prescription is to be used “If a ghost afflicts a person and s[ta]ys continuously in his body and can not [be dispelled].”⁴⁷⁰

“(It is) because of my family ghost which was set on me, or a strange ghost or a robber or murderer (which) day and night is bound after me and continually pursues me and stands (against me) for evil and can not be dispelled, (which) strikes my skull and so paralyzes my head, (which) strikes my cheek, seizes my mouth, makes my tongue bitter, (which) presses me between my arms and so makes my arms tense, (which) paralyzes my knees, makes my body twist with twisting . . .”⁴⁷¹

The introduction states: “[If either a ghost or a namtaru or a mukīl rēš lemutti-demon] aff[licts] a person and can not be dispelled].”⁴⁷²

The fit between legomena and introductory sections is not always as perfect as it might be. Did the āšipu err in the following example, or are we to understand that the two sets of symptoms are meant to be added to one another?

“Wind from an evil mouth has been blown into me; an evil rābišu-demon, which has been set on me so that it continually pursues me, struck the top of my head (so hard that) I bit my tongue; he struck my legs; my arms were (magically) bound; he has fallen on me so that he has knocked me over. That unknown [ghost] . . . remove him from my body so that he may not return to cause me confusional states.”⁴⁷³

The introductory section specifies that this prescription is to be used “If the middle of a person’s scalp (and) his temples continually hurt h[im] intensely, his ears roar, his palate continually gets d[ry], he continually has numbness and rimūtu-paralysis, his breasts continually hurt him, he is continually short of breath, the hair of his scalp constantly (feels like it is) standing on end, chills continually attack him, his limbs go numb on him, he continually has a crushing sensation in his chest, depression continually falls on him, he <cont[inuall]y> has an appetite and then cannot eat, <without relief [he v]omits [da]y and [night]>, a roving ghost afflicts that person, or lubātu, ‘hand’ of Mardu[k].”⁴⁷⁴

Most curious is a prescription which appears to have two separate laundry lists in the recitation and introductory section.

“I, who as a result of the anger of god and goddess, have been bound by an obligation. An utukku-demon, a rābišu-demon, a ghost (and) a lilū-demon-paralysis, twisting, numbness of the flesh, dizziness, šaššātu (and) insanity have they weighed out for me and daily they cause me to twist.”⁴⁷⁵

The introductory section indicates that this was to be used “If a ghost afflicts a person (and) continually pursues him or an alū-de[mon] or a gallū-demon] or a mukil rēš lemutti-demon afflicts him or anything evil continual[ly] afflicts him or [pursues him?]”⁴⁷⁶

Only exceptionally are Akkadian recitations in ghost prescriptions so vague or multi-purpose.

“My god, t[urn to me]; my goddess, look at me. Let your angry heart become calm towards me. [Let] your spirits [be relax]ed towards me. Establish well-being for me.”⁴⁷⁷

This is to be used “If a person continually sees dead persons.”⁴⁷⁸

“Ea [accept? my] pr[ayer? . . .]”⁴⁷⁹

This is to be used “if, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person[’s] ear[s] are inflamed?”⁴⁸⁰

“(By) the king, are you made to swear. (By) the king, are you made to swear. (By) the great exalted lord, king of the gods, Marduk, are you made to swear. Release! Evil, you must not approach!”⁴⁸¹

“You are angry, you are fuming, you are terrifying, you are raging, you are mighty, you are strong, you are difficult, you are evil, you are hostile. If not Ea, who can quiet you? If not Asalluḫi, who can pacify you? May Ea quiet you. May Asalluḫi pacify you.”⁴⁸²

These two recitations were to be used “if ‘hand’ of ghost stays continuously in a person’s body and cannot be dispelled.”⁴⁸³

This is labelled as a “recitation for the sting of a ghost.”⁴⁸⁵

References to Types of Ghosts

Akkadian recitations in ghost prescriptions not uncommonly give a laundry list of the various types of ghosts which might have caused the problem. A particularly fulsome example reads as follows.

“Whether you be a strange ghost, whose name nobody knows, or a roving ghost, or a roaming ghost, or the ghost (of someone) who was abandoned in the steppe, or the ghost (of someone) who died in water, or the ghost (of someone) who died in a river, or the ghost (of someone) who [died] in a well, or the ghost (of someone) who died of hunger, or the ghost (of someone) who [died] of thi[rst], o[r the gh]ost (of someone) who was burned in a fire, or the ghost (of someone) who d[ie]d of a ch[i]ll, [or the ghost (of someone) who died as a result of a cr]ime against a god, or the ghost (of someone) who d[ie]d as a result of a crime against the k[ing], [or the ghost (of someone) who] was thrown [in a dike] or irrigation ditch, or the [gh]ost (of someone) who di[ed] while pursued, [or a . . . ghost] or [a mu]rderous [ghost], [or a ghost who] has no [one to pour wate]r (for him), [or a ghost who] has nobody [to ca]re for him, . . . [whether] you be an evil ghost, or an evil gallû-demon [or an evil god], or an evil rābišu-demon, or anything evil as m[any as are given a name(?)].”⁴⁸⁶

Elements Specific to Specific Ghost Rituals: References to the Accompanying Dromena and/or Materia Magico-Medica

Another indication that some, at least, of the Akkadian legomena were composed for the type of prescription (or even for the very prescription) in which we now find them is the presence in the spoken parts of the prescriptions of references to the actions to be performed in the dromena and/or appeals to materia magico-medica to do their work. Thus, in the NAM.BÚR.BI’s and libation prescriptions, the libations which are to be made to ghosts are not infrequently also described in the accompanying legomena.

“For three days, he makes funerary offerings to his family ghost(s). He pours out a libation of beer (made from) roasted grain. . . . He says as follows . . . ‘(Šamaš), a funerary offering has been made for him; water has been libated for him (the ghost which cried out in my house).’ ”⁴⁸⁷

“You make a funerary offering to his family ghost(s). . . . Y[ou have] him [say] as follows: ‘Let it be dispelled from my body and [let me give] it [funerary] offering [bread to e]at; let me give it funerary offering water to drink; [le]t me [ma]ke [i]t a funerary display. The ghost (who) was set on me so as to consume me – let it be loosed from my body; let it be expelled a[nd] let it eat sweet(s); let it drink sweet (things). Let it eat small bread(s); let it drink cold (water).’ ”⁴⁸⁸

“You mix groat water, river water, well water, ditch water (and) vinegar into beer. You fill a pursītu-vessel (with it). You sti[r] in flour made from šigūšu-grain, ashes, and [flour made from] roasted grain. The patient lifts (the vessel) and holds it before Šamaš. He says as follows. . . . ‘Let this be [their] food of[fering]; [l]et [this] be their food portion; let this be their drink.’ ”⁴⁸⁹

“You have the patient raise water before Šamaš in the skull of a dog and then he sa[ys] as follows: ‘The ghost who afflicts me and can not be dispel[led] from my body – I will pour out a libation of water to him from the skull of a dog.’ ”⁴⁹⁰

Similarly, in figurine prescriptions the legomena sometimes make direct reference to the figurine and/or to the purpose for which it was intended.

“You make a figurine of the roving ghost. . . . The patient raises his hand(s) and you have him say as follows: . . . ‘That unknown [ghost] – I have made a figurine of him.’ ”⁴⁹¹

“You purify the clay pit. You put maṣḥatu-flour into it. In the morning, you say: ‘I will buy clay from the potter’s pit for a representation of whatever is evil, the male and [female] witch.’ You pinc[h] off clay . . . You make [x] figurines of the male and female witch.”⁴⁹²

“You present those figurines to Šamaš. You have him say as follows. . . . ‘Whether it be jerking or an evil rābišu-demon or a confusional state or shuddering which makes [me] jerk in the night, this (male figurine) is given as my substitute; this (female figurine) is given in my stead.’ ”⁴⁹³

In one case, the actual manufacture of the figurine is described in some detail in the legomena.

“You mix clay from a potter’s pit, tallow, (and) wax together and then you make a figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost. . . . You have him say three times . . . ‘Šamaš, this is the representation of the confusional state (causing) ghost; this is the representation of anything evil . . . Šamaš, in your presence, have I sought him out (and) looked for him. His self is like my self; his flesh is like the appearance of [my] flesh. I have mixed clay from the pure mountains, <tallow> (and) wax. I have made a representation of him.’ ”⁴⁹⁴

Reference might also be made to the way in which the figurine was to be manipulated.

“[You put out] bīnu-tamarisk and [maštakal]. You make [the figurine] stand [on i]t. (The patient) says as follows: ‘May the bīnu-tamarisk purify [me]. [May the maštakal re]lease me. May the earth receive (the figurine) from me; may it give me its divine radiance and [car]ry off my sickness.’ ”⁴⁹⁵

In one case, a series of recitations address a surrogate figurine directly.

“Eat this! You are my substitute” . . . “(A food portion) will be given to you.” “[Drink]” . . . “You have been provisioned. A dowry has been given to you. Little dwarf(?), you have been completely fitted out. As the substitute and in the stead of [NN so]n of NN you have been given.”⁴⁹⁶

In other cases, the typical practice of performing ghost burials at sunset is reflected in the legomena.⁴⁹⁷

“May he (the ghost) go to where the sun sets. May he be entrusted to Bidu, great doorkeeper of the Netherworld; <may Bidu, great doorkeeper of the Netherworld, strengthen the watch over him>; may he (Bidu) seize the šigaru of their (the ghosts’) namzaqu.”⁴⁹⁸

In magic encirclement prescriptions, appeal is sometimes made to the ingredients used to encircle the patient.

“(He says) ‘May baltu-thorn hold you back, may ašāgu-thorn hold you back, may the magic circle hold you back.’ . . . You pour sweet oil over the baltu-thorn (and) ašāgu-thorn (and) the magic circle.”⁴⁹⁹

“If you repeatedly smear [the gate] of the house where he (the patient) lives, the door, the bolt, the sides of his bed, his [tab]le (and) his reed mat (with it), he will not see (any more ghosts) . . . (He says) ‘May the wall hold you back, may the door of my gate turn back your breast at the command of Ea, Šamaš, (and) the āšīpu among the gods, Asalluḫi.’ ”⁵⁰⁰

Even in amulet and suppository prescriptions explicit reference is sometimes made to materia medica-magica.

“You twine together carded wool and red-dyed wool. . . . You have him say as follows. ‘Until the red co[m]es to look white (and) the white to look dyed red, may the ghost who meets with me not return and no[t meet] with me at the watch of the 29th.’ ”⁵⁰¹

This amulet recitation is phrased in clear Akkadian; references to materia medica-magica in suppository prescriptions are more typically tortuous and barely comprehensible.

“Ea created the PEŠ.DU₈ long ago in heaven and earth. May the stone curse it. <May the stone uproot it. May the stone consume it.> May the stone overturn it. May the stone lace [it] up. May the stone efface/bore through it.”⁵⁰²

The “stone” in question was probably one of the ingredients in the suppository.⁵⁰³

“The horn loosened it. [Ea] cr[eated (it). Long ago, in heav]en and earth, he cre[ated (it). You (horn) knock down its . . .]”⁵⁰⁴

The reference is to a suppository inserted into the ear, one of whose ingredients is nikipu,⁵⁰⁵ a plant whose name, if taken literally, would mean “blow (as of an ox’s horn)”. Another prescription uses a real ox horn.⁵⁰⁶

“The . . . is bored through. (The time) has approached for him; push it away. The suppository has come up (as easily as) a fox (climbs) a date palm, in order to uproot (the obstruction as easily as one uproots) alpha-grass – (as easily as) the ear (is cleaned by) my dagger.”⁵⁰⁷

In some cases, details appear in the legomena which are not described in the dromena of that particular prescription but which do appear in other prescriptions of the same type, a fact which suggests that the actions in question were indeed intended to be performed as described.

“This is he; this is a representation of him. Šamaš, in your presence have I sought him out and assigned him garments for him to clothe himself with, shoes for his feet, a girdle for his waist, a waterskin (filled with) water for him to drink (and) malt flour. I have given him travel provisions.”⁵⁰⁸

Relationship Between Legomena and Dromena: Sumerian Recitations

In contrast to recitations in Akkadian, those in Sumerian show relatively little adjustment to context, as indeed one might expect given that there is little if any evidence for prescriptions specific to ghosts before the Middle Assyrian period, by which time Sumerian had long ceased to be a living language. Sumerian recitations generally make appeal to gods special to the āšipu’s art such as Enki and Asalluḫi⁵⁰⁹ or to gods appropriate to demonic expulsion such as Nanna,⁵¹⁰ Utu,⁵¹¹ Ninurta⁵¹² or Ningirima⁵¹³ or to gods associated with the Netherworld such as Nergal⁵¹⁴ or the god of dreams.⁵¹⁵

The results are, however, not very specific. The problem afflicting the patient is mentioned if at all, only very briefly and, even then, it is usually the physical symptom produced by the ghost rather than the ghost itself that is typically mentioned.

“To make well the evil sinew for that person, that person; to make well the bound sinew, its matter, its matter to lay before the lord, to lay before the lady. (How) to make the bound sinew well for that person I (Asalluḫi) looked into (the matter). My father (Enki), I myself looked into it. For the lord, the hearer, having performed a divination, to the lord who did not know what to do, the he<arer> answered. Enki answered his son. Nindinugga, king of the gods, Nindinugg[a], foremost of the gods, Nindinugg[a], son of Ninazu, father Enki (answered) . . . Asalluḫi. Asalluḫ[i], you are the good king of the muškēnu. Asallu[ḫi], never release what must be seized.”⁵¹⁶

This appears in a prescription for one-sided pains: “You tie it on his side (or) wherever it hurts him. [If] you recite [the recitation ov]er his side, [he will get well].”⁵¹⁷

“By heaven may you swear, by earth may you swear. <May it (the oath) never release (you).> When you have sworn, may Anzagar who looses what is bound remove and turn away your breast. <He has bound (it).>”⁵¹⁸

The Akkadian portion of the recitation indicates that it was intended for use against apparitions.⁵¹⁹ One may perhaps presume, in view of the mention of the dream god,⁵²⁰ that the ghost against whom this was directed had been seen while dreaming.

Exceptionally specific to a ghostly context is the Sumerian recitation addressed to a chicken/goose heart.

“Remove the evil ghost; remove the evil ghost so that it does not approach the person’s body. May it (the heart) chase away whatever is evil for him (the patient).”⁵²¹

This is recited while the animal heart is laid over the patient’s heart.⁵²² Similarly, one of the Sumerian knotting prescription recitations manages to mention both the amulet and the ghost for whom it was intended.

“Utu, king of the ghosts : ghost . . . who releases the mouth that is bound; you are the one who releases the mouth. Utu, together with Anzagar and Mamu, you are the one who binds . . . Together with Anzagar and Mamu, you are the one who alters things for the good. The spell spoken by Enki, stag of the Abzu, stag of the Abzu, great lord Utu – let it change its place. The oath sworn by the gods together with Anzagar and effusive Mamu, Ereškigal, (and) Ninazu – let it not release it. May Nergal bind it with a band.”⁵²³

The recitation is described as a “recitation (to be used) if a dead person meets with a living person for evil purposes, to keep him away so that he does not see him.”⁵²⁴

Even this degree of fit between legomena and dromena is unusual. In many cases, Sumerian recitations are such as could have been used for any problem which was afflicting the patient. Usually, this involved being very vague.

“Enki, in order to make the evil creature leave; in order for Enki to make the evil creature leave; Enki, in order to make the evil creature leave mankind, at that command, let him come; at that command let him strike; le[t it return] to its place; let evil gossip stay away.”⁵²⁵

The label describes this as a “recitation (to be used when) one continually sees dead persons.”⁵²⁶

“Nanna, light of heaven and earth, rem[ove] the unpleasant sickness from my body.”⁵²⁷

These two recitations are attached to a prescription for headaches and numbness due to a “pursuing ghost.”⁵²⁹

“Father Enki . . . , father Enki who reveals the spell of Asalluḫi, son of Eridu. Asalluḫi has seen it. Because of it, the difficulty, because of it, the seizer of heaven and earth, who gives birth to existing things, makes (its) path distant (from) the person.”⁵³⁰

This was intended to be used “if a ghost afflicts a person (so that) his ears roar.”⁵³¹

“Watchful watcher who tracks down everything, whatever was created in the earth (or) the spawn of heaven, for (it) not to approach his (the patient’s) shape or form (any more than one could approach) heaven, for the hero utterly to destroy (them), to completely remove(?) them from his (the patient’s) shape or form, [to put] the demon on the path(?), to put the demon on the road – when you go there by your[self(?)], when you go there by yourself, Ninurta, king of the weapon, let it (the weapon) be put before you to smash the evil.”⁵³²

The label describes this also as a “recitation (for cases) where a person[’s] ear[s] roar.”⁵³³

“(Since) you truly know, since you are truly good, [her]o Ninur[ta], since you are truly good, [lord] Ninurta, since you are truly good, [king] Ninurta, may ‘they’ never approach.”⁵³⁴

Another way of being as unspecific as possible was to incorporate a laundry list of potential trouble causers into the recitation.

“Urukku-demon, relent; alû-demon, relent; ghost, relent; gallû-demon, relent; evil god, relent; rābiṣu-demon, relent; Lamaštu-demon, relent; labāṣu-demon, relent; aḥḥāzu-demon, relent. By the spell pronounced by Enki (and) the hero, Asalluḫi, son of Eridu, (and) at the command of Ningirim, mistress of spells. By heaven are you made to swear; by earth are you made to swear.”⁵³⁵

A further possibility was to give a brief list of unrelated symptoms all attributable to ghosts.

“Ghost in the muscles of his neck, when the cup continually sprinkles – he comes to rob him of his flesh (and) to divide (his right side from his left) – mightiest of the mighty, mightiest of the mighty, mightiest of the mighty, may the ghost who created the evil [stand] aside.”⁵³⁶

Perhaps not surprisingly, the recitation in question was not used for any of the complaints mentioned but rather for apparitions.⁵³⁷

The same lack of specificity is typical of the bilingual recitations.

“From today, you are kept away; from today, you are loosed; from today you are distant. From the body of NN go [after] your [fa]te.”⁵³⁸

“The pointing of the evil finger of mankind, the evil rumor of the people, the bitter curse of god and goddess, the transgression of the limits of the gods – in order to continually go around safely in the presence of the(se things), to loosen their curse . . . he is the god . . . the regions, [Enki, son] of the Abzu and his son Asalluḫi, [gods . . . : Ea] and his son Marduk, [gods ...] I . . . have changed . . . ‘hand’ of ghost . . .”⁵³⁹

Typology of Ritual by Presence or Absence of Recitation and Presence or Absence of Adjustment of Recitation to Context

As to why some ghost prescriptions contained unspecific Akkadian and/or Sumerian recitations when there were a good number of very specific recitations to choose from, a partial answer may be obtained by matching the legomena with their dromena. An analysis of the different procedures in accordance with the type and specificity of recitations reveals that the more or less generic Sumerian and Akkadian recitations which show adjustment to context only in terms of the specific symptom being dealt with or some mention of the procedure being used to allay it, are not at all evenly distributed among the total number of prescriptions containing recitations.

Of the seventy-four amulet prescriptions, most⁵⁴⁰ did not contain recitations. Of the fourteen which did,⁵⁴¹ four were knotting spells of which one (for apparitions) contained a rather tortuous Sumerian appeal to Utu⁵⁴² and an Akkadian recitation making direct reference to the amulet.⁵⁴³ Another two knotting spells (for ghostly pains) contained recitations in Sumerian which made reference to the patient’s medical problems, one at least being of the Marduk-Ea type.⁵⁴⁴ The final example (also for pain) contained a generic Akkadian prayer to Šamaš.⁵⁴⁵ Of these four, only in the knotting spell specifically designed for apparitions was there specific mention of a ghost.

Of the non-knotting amulets, three (for apparitions) contained bilingual appeals to the problem causer,⁵⁴⁶ three (for headaches [plus]) had Sumerian incantations directed towards the patient's symptoms,⁵⁴⁷ one (for ears) contained a Sumerian prayer to Ninurta⁵⁴⁸ plus a series of recitations in "Subarean"⁵⁴⁹ and tortuous Akkadian (referring to the action of the accompanying suppository),⁵⁵⁰ one (for unspecified ailments) had a generic Sumerian recitation designed to cover all bases;⁵⁵¹ two (one for apparitions and one for headache) are now lost.⁵⁵² In only two non-knotting amulets was any reference made to the ghost who was supposed to be causing the problem.⁵⁵³ In one of these, the ghost was only listed alongside a host of other potential trouble causers⁵⁵⁴ and in the other the symptoms for which the ghost was blamed in the recitation did not include those for which the recitation was being used.⁵⁵⁵

Of the sixty-six fumigant prescriptions for ghost related problems, only ten⁵⁵⁶ contained recitations. Of these, one (for headache) was a Sumerian recitation addressed to Asalluḫi,⁵⁵⁷ three (for roaring ears) were in "Subarean"⁵⁵⁸ and the rest (for headache or unspecified ailments) appear to have been more or less generic Sumerian or Akkadian recitations.⁵⁵⁹ In no case does the ghost who is supposed to be causing the problem appear to be mentioned in the recitation.

Of the eighty-four salve prescriptions for ghost related problems, only eight⁵⁶⁰ contained recitations. Of these, one (for ghostly pains) consisted of Akkadian appeals to a generic trouble causer,⁵⁶¹ and the rest (for headache or unspecified ailments) more or less generic Sumerian or bilingual incantations.⁵⁶² In only one case is the ghost who is supposed to be causing the problem mentioned in the recitation, and even then he appears alongside a host of other potential trouble-causers.⁵⁶³

Only one potion prescription for unspecified ailments contained a recitation,⁵⁶⁴ a generic Sumerian incantation also usable for salves or amulets (and thus already mentioned twice above) and designed to cover all possible bases.

A little more than half of the fourteen suppository prescriptions contained recitations. Of these eight (all for ear problems),⁵⁶⁵ the legomena of two are in "Subarean",⁵⁶⁶ one consists of a short Akkadian appeal to Ea,⁵⁶⁷ one of a Sumerian prayer to Ninurta⁵⁶⁸ and the remainder contain turgid Akkadian recitations making more or less direct reference to the desired action of the suppository.⁵⁶⁹ In no case is the ghost who is supposed to be causing the problem mentioned in the recitation.

By contrast, two of two NAM.BÚR.BI's contained recitations and both mentioned and/or described the noisy ghost which had occasioned the performance of the ritual.⁵⁷⁰ Similarly, all eight libation prescriptions contained one or more recitations. In four of these recitations, direct appeal was made to the ghost who insisted on appearing to the patient.⁵⁷¹ In two others, short prayers were addressed to the god and goddess whose anger has resulted in the ghost's haunting but without explicit mention of the ghost,⁵⁷² although one of the prescriptions contained a second recitation which did mention him.⁵⁷³ The remaining recitations were, with only one exception,⁵⁷⁴ addressed to Šamaš.⁵⁷⁵ The exception is also anomalous in being the only libation prescription in this group to contain a recitation in Sumerian and not to mention the ghost or dead person. This Sumerian recitation was, however, once again accompanied by an Akkadian recitation which did mention him.⁵⁷⁶

In nine of the twenty-four figurine or other surrogate prescriptions, direct appeal was made to the ghost afflicting the patient.⁵⁷⁷ All of the recitations which were simultaneously addressed to Ea, Šamaš and Asalluḫi were included among the figurine prescriptions.⁵⁷⁸ Since these recitations were also accompanied by the only meat sacrifices to be found in ghost prescriptions,⁵⁷⁹ it is perhaps not surprising that they appear in what must have been the most expensive rituals to begin with, namely the preparation and manipulation of figurines. The remaining recitations were, with only six exceptions, addressed to Šamaš alone.⁵⁸⁰ These six consist of an Akkadian prayer to Girra,⁵⁸¹ necessitated by the prominent use of a reed torch in the accompanying ritual, a generic Sumerian prayer to Enki,⁵⁸² three Akkadian instructions for a surrogate figurine which was to be ritually married to the ghost,⁵⁸³ and a Sumerian address to a chicken/goose heart which was supposed to be drawing the ghost off from the patient.⁵⁸⁴ Of these, only two recitations made no direct or indirect mention of the ghost: the Sumerian prayer to Enki, mentioned above,⁵⁸⁵ and a short statement of intent to manufacture a figurine of the witch (who had set the ghost on the patient).⁵⁸⁶

In one of the six magic encirclement prescriptions, direct appeal was made to the ghost afflicting the patient.⁵⁸⁷ In three, “Subarean” recitations were whispered into the patient’s ears.⁵⁸⁸ The remaining recitations were mostly addressed to Šamaš.⁵⁸⁹ In one prescription, however, due to the fact that the time chosen for the performance was a “day in which the sun and moon stand together”,⁵⁹⁰ the god Sîn was also addressed.⁵⁹¹ The remaining recitation made appeal to Ninurta whose war-like propensities made him an appropriate “smasher” of the evil ghost.⁵⁹²

In sum, the legomena of ghost prescriptions allow us to distinguish between two types of procedure. On the one hand, we have NAM.BÚR.BI’s, libations, figurines or other surrogates and magic encirclement prescriptions and on the other, we have amulets, fumigations, bandages, suppositories, etc. The first involve a high degree of patient participation, and are not only are more likely to contain legomena than those of the second category, but the recitations which do occur are also much more likely to be drawn from that subset of prescriptions which are particularly adapted to a ghostly context.

The reason for these discrepancies does not seem particularly difficult to fathom. The obvious difference between NAM.BÚR.BI’s, libations, figurines or other surrogates and magic encirclement prescriptions on the one hand and amulets etc. on the other is that the former procedures were all directed against the ghost qua ghost. NAM.BÚR.BI’s differ from one another in accordance with the specific ill-omened being with which the patient has come into contact; libations and figurines were clearly (and in some cases explicitly) intended as propitiatory offerings to the trouble causer, and magic encirclement prescriptions to surround and entrap him. As such, one would expect recitations accompanying them to be more likely to make explicit address to the ghost and/or to identify him as directly as possible while laying out the exact problem which he had caused and appealing to the gods for help in getting him to cooperate. By contrast, amulets, fumigants, salves, etc. consisted primarily of medicaments and, as such, were, to all appearances, directed against the ghost in his capacity as one among many possible causers of specific ills. There was thus no harm in using recitations which were specific only to the type of ache or pain or to the procedure being employed or which made general appeal to gods of healing, and nothing required that each and every (or even most) of the texts actually mention the ghost. It remains to be seen whether these distinctions will hold when the accompanying dromena are examined.

Chapter 5

DROMENA

Division of Labor Between Healer(s) and Patient

Most of the instructions given in ancient Mesopotamian prescriptions are of the nature of pharmaceutica: you take such and such ingredients, you prepare them in such and such a way and you administer them as follows. When the texts specify which professional healer is meant to be carrying out these instructions, it is usually the ^{LÚ}MAŠ.MAŠ: āšipu who is mentioned,⁵⁹³ although it is made clear in some cases that the ^{LÚ}A.ZU: asû might be involved as well.⁵⁹⁴

In one prescription,⁵⁹⁵ which is exceptional also in its use of parts of a freshly slaughtered animal as surrogates for the patient, a post-menopausal woman (MUNUS šá Û.TU KUD-tu) appears in an assisting role in addition to the āšipu.⁵⁹⁶ Why her assistance was needed in this case is unclear, but the choice of a woman of this particular stage of life was probably dictated by the need for ritual purity⁵⁹⁷ which is otherwise strongly emphasized by the texts.⁵⁹⁸

Due to the consistent use of logograms, it is not always clear which actions were to be performed by the patient and which by the healer. However, there are a few texts which are careful to distinguish between “you” (the healer) and “he” (the patient) or which explicitly specify the subject of the verb. These texts make it clear that the professional healer was the major agent in ghost prescriptions. He was required to make the initial preparations for the ritual: preparing propitiatory libations,⁵⁹⁹ purifying the clay pit,⁶⁰⁰ laying out objects,⁶⁰¹ and helping the patient to ready himself,⁶⁰² as well as making the offerings to the gods⁶⁰³ and to the ghosts of the patient’s family.⁶⁰⁴

He usually also performed the central procedure. He made figurines,⁶⁰⁵ dressed or equipped them,⁶⁰⁶ manipulated them,⁶⁰⁷ and buried them.⁶⁰⁸ He also dealt with other surrogates,⁶⁰⁹ arranged magic encirclement,⁶¹⁰ and made and administered amulets,⁶¹¹ fumigants,⁶¹² bandages,⁶¹³ salves,⁶¹⁴ potions,⁶¹⁵ aliments,⁶¹⁶ washes,⁶¹⁷ and suppositories.⁶¹⁸ The healer also helped in the final dissociative actions.⁶¹⁹

The ancient Mesopotamian patient was largely the object rather than the subject of treatment, but he was nevertheless considerably less passive than his modern counterpart. In addition to eating or drinking what he was told⁶²⁰ and submitting to bandaging, rubbings, washes and enemas as required,⁶²¹ when the procedure was a NAM.BÚR.BI, libation, figurine, or magic encirclement, he might also be asked to participate in the dromena and legomena to a greater or lesser degree. Apart from purifying himself,⁶²² and procuring ingredients⁶²³ the patient was, as we have seen, not infrequently called upon to recite one of the recitations.⁶²⁴ It was also the patient who usually made propitiatory libations⁶²⁵ and who held up the figurines to the gods.⁶²⁶ In one text in which the ghost was given a wife in the form of a reed figurine, it was the patient who gave the figurine its “dowry” and wedding feast.⁶²⁷ In the ghost NAM.BÚR.BI’s, the patient took a more active role,⁶²⁸ even performing some of the sacrifices normally reserved for the āšipu.⁶²⁹

The Offerings and Other Peripherals

All ancient Mesopotamian ghost prescriptions contain some indication⁶²⁰ as to the patient's symptoms, plus instructions as to what was to be done and/or what recitations were to be made. In addition to these basics, two out of two ghost NAM.BÚR.BI's,⁶³¹ six out of eight libations,⁶³² twelve out of twenty-one figurines,⁶³³ one out of three surrogates,⁶³⁴ and one out of six magic encirclement prescriptions,⁶³⁵ one out of seventy-two amulets (a knotting spell),⁶³⁶ and one out of seventy-six salves⁶³⁷ included instructions relating to offerings⁶³⁸ to be made to gods who, it was hoped, would assist in ensuring that the procedure achieved success and/or gave directions for purification rites or dissociative actions peripheral to the main thrust of the dromena's performance.

It was typically the sun god Šamaš to whom offerings were made in ghost prescriptions.⁶³⁹ This preponderance of offerings to the sun god is a reflection of the fact that it was also Šamaš to whom appeal was typically made in ghost prescriptions.⁶⁴⁰ In a few cases, Ea and Asalluḫi or the moon god Sîn also receive appeals in prayer alongside Šamaš and are consequently included in the offerings.⁶⁴¹ Special to the moon god is the libation of cow's milk.⁶⁴² It is interesting to note in this connection that prescriptions in which appeal is made to Ea, Šamaš and Asalluḫi are the only ones to be accompanied by the sacrifice of an animal.⁶⁴³ This is presumably due to the cost of providing such an offering, only justifiable when a whole battery of gods needed to be enlisted.⁶⁴⁴ In one prescription, in which the figurine is to be left out overnight for three nights under the stars,⁶⁴⁵ the latter receive a scattering of emmer flour.⁶⁴⁶ Finally, Ereškigal's scribe, Ningeštinanna, once receives a gift of a stylus,⁶⁴⁷ presumably a reminder to her to make sure that the ghost was properly enrolled in the Netherworld upon his return.

In some cases, merdītu-offerings were made on the evening before the ritual was to take place.⁶⁴⁸ As to what the difference was between this and normal offerings, more will be said presently.

The typical practice was for the āšipu to set up an offering table⁶⁴⁹ or a reed altar.⁶⁵⁰ On this would be laid out food portions⁶⁵¹ consisting of small breads⁶⁵² or bread made from fine white (isqūqu) flour.⁶⁵³ The portions came in bundles⁶⁵⁴ of twelve,⁶⁵⁵ seven,⁶⁵⁶ or two⁶⁵⁷ for each deity invoked.

It was also customary to scatter dates and sasqū flour.⁶⁵⁸ Mersu-confection made with ghee and honey might also be offered.⁶⁵⁹ Occasionally, a magic heap of flour was laid down for the gods while invoking their names.⁶⁶⁰ Flour or flour mixtures might also be scattered.⁶⁶¹ In addition to vegetable food, meat was sometimes provided. An animal would be slaughtered, and the god or gods were offered the shoulder, caul fat, and the roasted flesh.⁶⁶²

For the gods' refreshment, lahannu-jars might be provided. There were either two or four of these at a time, and they would be filled, some with water and some with beer,⁶⁶³ so that the gods could have their beverage at whatever strength they preferred. Often, beer⁶⁶⁴ or wine⁶⁶⁵ or, exceptionally, cow's milk⁶⁶⁶ was poured out, and an adagurru-vessel or pursītu-vessel was often set out to hold the libation.⁶⁶⁷

sacrifice (nīqu). In some unusual cases, however, the libation was poured instead onto the offering arrangements or over the sacrificed animals (as is illustrated in one of Aššurbanipal's hunting reliefs).⁶⁶⁸ Where ritual instructions refer to such a libation, the term naqû is replaced by redû.⁶⁶⁹ It seems reasonable to suppose, especially in view of the fact that one is usually said to redû a merdîtu-offering, that the latter was distinguished from a nīqu-offering precisely by this unusual method of pouring out the libation.⁶⁷⁰

During the proffered meal, aromatic substances were burned on censers, to create an appetizing ambiance, free of unpleasant smells (and noxious insects). Typically, burāšu-juniper was used for this purpose.⁶⁷¹ Once, šurmēnu-cypress as well as burāšu-juniper was used,⁶⁷² and once assorted aromatics are called for.⁶⁷³ Sometimes, it is specified that ašāgu-thorn charcoal is to be used.⁶⁷⁴

The god seems usually to have been expected to stand, but once a seat was provided, spread with a mišhu-cloth.⁶⁷⁵ Once the preparations for the sacral meal were complete, the āšipu politely withdrew and prostrated himself, so that the god could eat in peace.⁶⁷⁶ Some texts recommend giving presents of silver and other valuables to Šamaš,⁶⁷⁷ and a cedar and [...] stylus to Ningestianna,⁶⁷⁸ an appropriate gift to the scribe of the gods "whose stylus is (made of) lapis (and) carnelian."⁶⁷⁹

Sometimes, funerary offerings were also made to the family ghosts.⁶⁸⁰ To make them more effective, these might be repeated on three consecutive days.⁶⁸¹ Water mixed with roasted grain or beer (made from) roasted grain⁶⁸² was an appropriate libation for a ghost, in contrast to the ordinary beer and wine offered to gods. Similarly, bread offerings to ghosts and gods follow the rule of roasted grain for the former and fine white flour for the latter.⁶⁸³ As for meat products, hot broth and the rib section of a sacrifice were considered appropriate.⁶⁸⁴

Offerings intended for the family ghosts seem to have required no special setting. Gods, on the other hand, were not in any sense part of the family and expected to be treated as honored guests. The preparation of a special area for the god's meal is common to magical texts in general.⁶⁸⁵ What is interesting to note, however, is that, the more formal the sacrifice, the more necessary it seems to have been to set aside a place for it. Whereas setting up a censer and pouring out a libation might or might not require any special preparations,⁶⁸⁶ when a table or reed altar was put up to receive formal offerings of bread and/or meat, some attempt to mark off the area is usually mentioned.⁶⁸⁷ Locating in a secluded place in the steppe land⁶⁸⁸ ensured a minimum of previous human disturbance of the site, as did the choice of a canal bank.⁶⁸⁹ The purity of the site was further ensured by sweeping it clean with a palm frond⁶⁹⁰ and by sprinkling pure water on it to settle the dust.⁶⁹¹

It would do little good to sanctify the site for offerings to the gods if the participants were themselves dirty. One text therefore instructs both healer and patient to cleanse themselves before commencing the ritual.⁶⁹² A similar concern for purity inspired instructions to the patient to wash his hands with soap and gypsum before reciting a prayer.⁶⁹³

These initial rites of purification and separation are echoed in the dissociative rites which completed many of these same prescriptions.⁶⁹⁴ Having expelled the ghost or other evil, the patient could make sure it did not return by washing himself⁶⁹⁵ or changing his clothes⁶⁹⁶ or anointing himself with oil⁶⁹⁷ or being purified with reed torches and censers.⁶⁹⁸ Any burnt material from the ritual would be dumped into an abandoned waste where it could do nobody any harm⁶⁹⁹ and, apart from stopping in a tavern to pour a final libation for the gods,⁷⁰⁰ and to touch the door and door bolt⁷⁰¹ in order to rid himself of any residual traces of evil,⁷⁰² the patient went straight home⁷⁰³ without looking behind him⁷⁰⁴ by a street other than the one he took to get to the ritual.⁷⁰⁵ If he was already at home, magic encirclement could be employed to protect his bed from further assault.⁷⁰⁶

The Operative Section

Ghost NAM.BÚR.BI's

The first category of ghost prescriptions are NAM.BÚR.BI's: rites designed to avert the evil portended by ominous events. There are two of these,⁷⁰⁷ one complete and one fragmentary. The complete example reads as follows.

“In order to avert the evil (portended by) a ghost's cry, you (the āšipu) crush a potsherd from an abandoned tell in water and he (the patient) sprinkles the house (with it). For three days, he makes funerary offerings to his family ghost(s). He pours out a libation of beer (made from) roasted grain. Before Šamaš, he scatters burāšu-juniper (on) a censer. He pours out a libation of beer. He sets out a gift for Šamaš. He says as follows: ‘Šamaš . . . the ghost which cried out in my house . . . a funerary offering has been made for him; water has been libated for him. May the evil (portended by) his cry go off after him. May the [e]vil (portended by) his cry of evil not approach me.’ He continually does this for three days and then . . . He washes his [hand]s and he purifies himself(?) and rubs on oil. It (the ritual) is finished.”⁷⁰⁸

This solution to the problem of portended evil was a simple one, consisting of purification, first of the house in which the ghost uttered his cry, and then of the house's owner with the assistance of the family ghosts and of the sun god Šamaš, both of whom are appealed to with sacrifices.⁷⁰⁹

The use of a potsherd from an abandoned tell in the water to be sprinkled on the person's house⁷¹⁰ is interesting and quite appropriate to the context, in view of the fact that tells were a favored stamping ground of ghosts: “Dead persons – those whose cities are tells (and) they are (nothing but) bones – why do you meet with me?”⁷¹¹

The second ghost NAM.BÚR.BI reads as follows.

“If a ghost cries out in a person's house, (there will be) death in the person's house. If an evil apparition appears in a person's house, in order that this evil not approach the person and his house, in the late afternoon, he makes a merdītu-offering to Šamaš. In the morning, in the steppe, in a secluded place, you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pure water. You set up a reed altar before Šamaš. On the reed altar, [you p]ut three portions (of) two (breads) each (made from) isqūqu-flour. You scatter dates and sasqū-flour. [You put] mersu-confection, honey and ghee (on it). You set up an [ad] agurru-vessel. You plant an arrow (in the ground). You set up [a censer (burning) bu] rāšu-juniper. You pour out a libation of beer. To the right of the offering arrangement, in the shade of the west wing, you scatter . . . and [sa] hlû(?). [You pour out] beer (made from) roasted grain [as a libation]. [You have him say as follows]: ‘[May] the ghost which [cried out] in my house for evil purposes [not] approach (me).’ [To the left of the offering arrangement in the shade of the east? wing, you scatter . . . You pour out a libation of . . .] In the late afternoon, (. . .) you have him say as [fo]llows: . . . (the rest of the text is lost).”⁷¹²

It is unfortunate that the essence of the instructions is lost, leaving us only with the preparatory sacrifices to Šamaš and the making of offerings on either side of the sacrificial altar. Due to lacunae, it is impossible to know for sure who, apart from the sun god, is supposed to be helping the practitioner rid himself of the evil portended by the ghost’s cry. However, if the apparent parallel to one of the Ištar-Dumuzi rituals is apt,⁷¹³ the sacrifice and prayer to the right of the offering arrangement should have been meant for the family ghosts and that to the left for the Anunnaki gods (i.e. underworld gods).⁷¹⁴

Apart from specific references to ghosts, the use of a potsherd from an abandoned tell, the prominence of funerary offerings, and the full three days required for the performance of the first example, there is nothing in particular which distinguishes ghost NAM.BÚR.BI’s from other NAM.BÚR.BI’s. Ghost NAM.BÚR.BI’s were used in cases of “ghostly screams” or where necromantic activity resulted in a problem ghost who refused to deliver the hoped for advice. They are not attested for apparitions, headaches, or other manifestations of ghosts.⁷¹⁵

Libations

Another eight⁷¹⁶ ghost prescriptions involved the offering of libations to the ghost in hopes that he would go away.⁷¹⁷ Typically, they consisted of various types of liquid – “groat water,” river water, well water, and ditch water – sometimes mixed with beer and vinegar,⁷¹⁸ into which flour made from roasted šigūšu-grain⁷¹⁹ and/or ashes⁷²⁰ were mixed with a blade of elpetu-grass.⁷²¹ In one case, the flour was poured out and followed by a libation of water,⁷²² and once donkey urine was used as the liquid.⁷²³ None of these offerings is terribly palatable, no doubt intentionally so in hopes that the ghost might take his due but not be eager to come back for a second helping. Dare we suggest that the flour-water mixture was designed to literally glue the complaining ghost’s mouth shut?

The libation vessel might be a *pursītu*⁷²⁴ such as was used to make offering to gods, but ghosts were not usually so honored. It was more likely to be an ox hoof⁷²⁵ or an ox horn⁷²⁶ (one of the words for ghost is written with the sign for ox) or even the skull of a dog.⁷²⁷ The mixture was poured out⁷²⁸ as many as three times⁷²⁹ either onto the ground or into a pit dug towards the setting sun with a copper spade.⁷³⁰ This last was clearly intended as an avenue to the Netherworld through which the ghost could be lured back to the place where he belonged. To make it clear to the ghost that acceptance of the offering entailed a certain quid pro quo,⁷³¹ ritual oaths were not infrequently administered.⁷³² In connection with this, the name of the dead person might be invoked while the libation was being poured.⁷³³ If libations did not work the first time, they were simply repeated.⁷³⁴

In two cases, something slightly more complicated was envisaged.

“If a person continually sees dead persons, ‘hand’ of Ištar; to keep the dead persons away, river water, well water, “groa[t] water” (and) ditch water you mix in separately. You fill an ox horn and you lift the horn in your right (hand and) a reed torch in your left and he says as follows: ‘My god, t[urn to me]; my goddess, look at me. Let your angry heart become calm towards me. [Let] your spirits [be relax]ed towards me. Establish well-being for me.’ [He sa]ys [this]. (If) he extinguishes the reed torch with the water from the ox horn, dead persons will be kept away.”⁷³⁵

The particular problem addressed by this libation prescription was the always present possibility that it was anger on the part of the gods which had resulted in the haunting. The prescription was, therefore, less concerned with buying off the ghost with a libation than it was in appeasing the gods who had “set” him⁷³⁶ on the patient. This was accomplished by literally quenching their anger (the lighted torch) with the offering water.

The second complicated libation prescription reads as follows.

“If a person continually sees dead persons, in the la[t]e afternoon you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pure water. You set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper on ašāgu-thorn coals before Šamaš. You pour out a libation of beer and then you prostrate yourself. You mix together well water, river water, ditch water, “groat [water]”, vinegar and hīqu-beer. You pour it into an ox horn. You scatter ash[es] on (its) surface. The patient lifts it (the horn) in his left hand. He [lifts] a reed torch in his right (hand and) the [o]x ho[rn] in his left and says as follows: ‘My god, turn to me; my goddess, be relaxed towards me. Let y[ou]r angry heart become calm towards me. Let your spirits be relaxed. Establish well-being for me.’ When you have had him say this, you stand before Šamaš and say as follows: ‘The many dead persons who meet with NN son of NN or a dead person known to him who meets with him – so that he may not return and meet with NN, your servant, I will give him this. Let him receive (it) from me and so not return and not meet with NN, your servant.’ When you have said this, the liquid which is in the ox horn in the pa[tient’s] hands he pours out. He invokes the name of the dead person. He says as follows: ‘You are made to swear.’ You [lift up] the reed torch [and say as follows: ‘F]rom this day on, head for (somewhere) else.’”⁷³⁷

In this libation prescription, the concerns about gods’ anger and the buying off of the ghost are combined. The patient pleaded with the gods for mercy, leaving the āšipu to lay down the conditions under which the offering was being given to the ghost. The patient then made the offering and administered the ritual oath, leaving the āšipu the reed torch to use for the final purificatory rites.

Unlike the NAM.BÚR.BI’s, of which those specifically designed for ghosts form a small minority, libations to troublesome spirits are relatively uncommon outside of ghost prescriptions.⁷³⁸ Virtually all libation prescriptions were directed against apparitions. One seems to have been used against neurological disorders;⁷³⁹ no other purely physical problems were dealt with by means of libations. May we, then, presume that the neurological disorders in question were accompanied by apparitions?

Figurines

The central rite of twenty-one⁷⁴⁰ prescriptions involved the manipulation of one or more figurines, usually made of clay.⁷⁴¹ In many prescriptions, the source of this clay is not mentioned, but in several, a potter's pit is specified.⁷⁴² Once, this pit is said to be located in the patient's house.⁷⁴³ Before it could be used for ritual purposes, the clay pit had to be purified.⁷⁴⁴ Since this could take up to three days,⁷⁴⁵ and seems to have required at least an overnight wait,⁷⁴⁶ it was usual to take care of making the figurine(s) first, even before setting up the offering arrangements,⁷⁴⁷ in order to avoid wasting too much of the gods' time.

In addition to purifying the clay pit, one could placate it with offerings. These took the form of small amounts of precious metals and semi-precious stones⁷⁴⁸ and/or maṣḥatu-flour⁷⁴⁹ thrown into the pit while saying the patient's name.⁷⁵⁰ These offerings were thought of as the "purchase price" for the clay which was taken for the ritual.⁷⁵¹ In one case, the source of the clay was not a potter's pit but dust collected from various places.⁷⁵² Sometimes, the clay was mixed with other ingredients: tallow and wax,⁷⁵³ or ox blood.⁷⁵⁴ In a few cases, figurines were made of flour mixed with donkey urine⁷⁵⁵ or a section of reed⁷⁵⁶ or straw mixed with excrement and donkey urine⁷⁵⁷ or wood⁷⁵⁸ or wax.⁷⁵⁹ When clay or clay mixtures were used, the clay was pinched off⁷⁶⁰ and then shaped into a figurine.⁷⁶¹

Just what this figurine was supposed to represent depended on the ritual. Usually it was the ghost⁷⁶² or dead person⁷⁶³ or namtaru (personal fate demon), etc.⁷⁶⁴ or the sickness⁷⁶⁵ or "whatever evil thing (it is)."⁷⁶⁶ In most cases,⁷⁶⁷ only one figurine of the ghost was judged necessary; sometimes, however, all bases were covered by manufacturing multiple figurines for each of the various possible trouble causers,⁷⁶⁸ or, minimally, one male and one female figurine.⁷⁶⁹ Where witches had induced the ghost affliction, these figurines represented the witch.⁷⁷⁰

It was common for the name of the figurine to be written on its left shoulder.⁷⁷¹ Bottéro argues⁷⁷² that this name was written "un peu partout: à droite, à gauche, devant et derrière, sur la figurine". This is, however, based on a misunderstanding of a passage which actually states: "You write its name (on it). You have it hold its mouth with its right hand and its rear end with its left."⁷⁷³ Sometimes the name was invoked as well as written on the figurine.⁷⁷⁴ Sometimes, the figurines were simply told their names.⁷⁷⁵

One might think that these instructions would have been difficult if not impossible to carry out in ghost prescriptions since, as many of the recitations indicate, the ghost was not always known to his victim. The contradiction is, however, more apparent than real; as several of the texts make clear, the "name" of the ghost figurine was never "PN, Mr. ghost" but something on the order of "ghost who is persecuting PN (the patient)."⁷⁷⁶ This sort of labelling had the advantage of avoiding the necessity for generating a separate specific type of figurine for each of the numerous ills which might conceivably attack a patient by allowing a label alone to distinguish between an amorphous lump of clay meant to represent a ghost and one meant for a witch, sickness, etc. More importantly, calling a figurine “the ghost that is bothering the patient” and not “the ghost of the patient’s uncle Qaqqadanu”, even if the patient were 99% certain that it had to be uncle Qaqqadanu, would avoid the danger of inadvertently accusing the wrong ghost, thus leaving the real culprit unpunished, and simultaneously offending the god of justice to whom appeal was being made.⁷⁷⁷

Once the figurine was manufactured, it was not uncommon to dress it in some sort of clothing,⁷⁷⁸ usually a makeshift garment,⁷⁷⁹ or a red or black garment.⁷⁸⁰ In one case, a lion skin was used for this purpose.⁷⁸¹ The figurine might be anointed with oil⁷⁸² and further fitted out with necklaces of carnelian⁷⁸³ or might be given various objects⁷⁸⁴: spindle, carpeting, and pin,⁷⁸⁵ a golden reed,⁷⁸⁶ a golden staff,⁷⁸⁷ a copper axe,⁷⁸⁸ a lead water pipe,⁷⁸⁹ or an ox horn such as was used to make libations to ghosts.⁷⁹⁰

Ritual Burial

Once the figurine was ready, it could be used as a means of manipulating the ghost.⁷⁹¹ When seen in the light of other ancient Mesopotamian rituals involving figurines, comparatively little animus was expressed against the ghost when the figurine was manipulated.⁷⁹² The reason for this restraint on the part of the practitioners of anti-ghost magic is presumably that drastic measures were generally unnecessary. Ghosts were believed to torment their victims because they had not been properly buried or were not receiving their funerary offerings. Reduced to eating garbage and drinking muddy water,⁷⁹³ they were objects as much of pity as of dread. The logical solution to the problem of troublesome ghosts, therefore, was to give them burial magically, and this is what the majority⁷⁹⁴ of the ghost expulsion prescriptions involved with figurines instruct the āšipu to do.⁷⁹⁵

Before a figurine was buried, it might be given food offerings or provisions for up to three days.⁷⁹⁵ These included such comestibles as barley gruel,⁷⁹⁶ groats, beerbread, and malt porridge.⁷⁹⁷ These provisions ensured that the ghost would have plenty to eat on his/her journey to the Netherworld. The figurine might also be honored with hot broth⁷⁹⁸ or a libation of roasted grain flour mixed with water and beer.⁷⁹⁹

It was understood that the figurine representing the ghost was to serve as a surrogate for the patient.⁸⁰⁰ In other words, the figurine was to provide a new home for the ghost which he could do with as he pleased, while the old home (the patient’s body) was left in peace. This is made explicit in one prescription in which the ghost is given a “wife” and invited to “prey upon her li[ke] the lion of Šamaš.”⁸⁰¹ In order to cement the surrogate-patient relationship, the person might be instructed to sleep with the figurine for several nights⁸⁰² or, at the very least, to raise the figurines before Šamaš.⁸⁰³

Ghosts may have been comparatively easy to deal with, but it did not follow that they could necessarily be trusted to take the proffered offerings and go away. In order to make sure that the ghost did what he was told, his figurine might be chained,⁸⁰⁴ rubbed with goat hair,⁸⁰⁵ blinded by having its eyes covered,⁸⁰⁶ have an e’ru-tree peg⁸⁰⁷ or a dog’s tooth stuck in its mouth,⁸⁰⁸ its hands positioned over orifices⁸⁰⁹ or its feet twisted.⁸¹⁰ For good measure, this maltreatment might be accompanied or supplanted by threats⁸¹¹ or forced oaths.⁸¹² The figurine might also be isolated by putting it out on the roof between cedar shavings planted in the ground, surrounding it with a magic circle, and covering it with an unbaked fermenting vessel to prevent escape by air.⁸¹³ This particular set of precautions may have been necessitated by the fact that the figurine and ritual paraphernalia were allowed to sit out unattended under the sun and stars for several days.⁸¹⁴

Once these preparations were over, the figurine was ready for burial. But first it might be put into a coffin such as the dead person would have had if he had been properly buried: a jar.⁸¹⁵ For extra protection, it might first be put in a copper cup.⁸¹⁶ In one case, a gazelle horn was used for burial.⁸¹⁷ It was a wise precaution to close up the mouth of the vessel,⁸¹⁸ or at least to scatter some šigūšu-flour over it.⁸¹⁹ The figurine was made to face left towards the setting sun.⁸²⁰ Burials of figurines typically took place in the late afternoon or at sundown⁸²¹ so that the ghost might be sent down (like the sun) to the Netherworld. Figurines were buried in a pit⁸²² dug out in the steppe⁸²³ or in a canal bank⁸²⁴ or in the shade of a baltu- or ašāgu-thorn⁸²⁵ or immured in a drainage opening⁸²⁶ or a hole on the west side,⁸²⁷ or were simply laid to rest in the family tomb.⁸²⁸ Choosing a shady spot for the burial had the added advantage of putting the ghost under the protection/control (literally “shadow”) of the nearby tree.⁸²⁹ A libation of water⁸³⁰ or dove’s blood⁸³¹ might then be poured over the buried figurine and, as a final precaution, the site might be surrounded with a magic circle of šigūšu-flour⁸³² or flour and saḫlû mixed together.⁸³³ The latter ingredient was appropriate to creatures whose “homes are tells” since it grows well on abandoned sites and was sometimes deliberately sown there as a symbol of total and permanent destruction.⁸³⁴

In a few cases, something slightly more complicated was envisaged. One burial ritual involved the use of a representation of the victim as well as that of the afflicting spirit.

“... The figurine of the dead person to [Šamaš ...] you put before him. The figurine of the living person [you ...]. (As for) the figurine of the living person, [you p]our out a libation into an a[dagurru]-vessel. (As for) the figurine of the dead person, in a lah[annu]-vessel [you ...] (As for) the figurine of the dead person, you dig a grave and b[ur]y it. You make it swear a ritual oath an[d ...] You w[ash] the figurine of the living person with pure water. You soak (it) before Šamaš. The patient washes his body (and) [his] hea[d. ... You [sa]y: “You are getting soaked” three times. He shouts: “Let them get shrunk!” He must not take (to get home) the street he took (to get there). He goes straight home.”⁸³⁵

In this prescription, the desired separation between the living and the dead was signalled by the separate manipulation of two figurines. One of these represented the ghost who was to be buried and the other the living person who was to be purified of his illness in the course of the ritual. In the process, any ghosts who insisted on clinging to the figurine of the living person as it was being soaked, rather than joining the figurine of the dead person in burial as intended, would get exactly what they deserved.

“Šamaš ... a ghost (or) mukil rēš lemutti which was set on me and so continually pursues me – I am continually frightened and terrified (about him) – he continually sets about oppressing and murdering me. . . . entrust him to his family ghost(s).' Recitation (to be used when) one continually sees dead persons. Its ritual: You make four figurines of clay. You wrap them as you would a pestle. (i.e. you lay them down on the wrappings, tuck over the edge and roll them up). They carry a lead pipe. You make a wax figurine of the illness. You cover their (the clay figurines') eyes with date palm bark. You melt(?) it (the wax figurine) with fire. In his family grave you lay them (the clay figurines)."⁸³⁶

The problem envisaged by this ritual was to ensure that, once the afflicting ghost was placated, any illness which might have been caused by the ghostly apparition would also be simultaneously remedied. This was achieved by offering the ghost(s) a place among the patient's relatives and an opportunity to receive a steady diet of funerary offerings (which is why the figurines were buried in the family grave and supplied with a lead water pipe such as was used to make libations to the dead). The quid pro quo was, of course, the abandonment of the patient's illness to its fate, an outcome signalled by the melting(?) of a wax figurine designed to represent it.

Probably the most baroque of ghost surrogate burial rituals involved the immurement of a specially manufactured reed puppet in the drainage hole of a wall.

"If a ghost afflicts a person, a section of reed should be collected. At the node, where its leaf (is), you give her a face. You fashion a yellow mouth and lips of w[a]x. A finger's length lower down, you bore a hole [from one side to] the other. You stick a twig into (the hole). You make [her arms] and forearms resemble a hoist(?). You draw a navel and a vulva (on her). You bore through the top part of the section of reed. You break off a twig and install it (in the hole) so that it is on the level (at exact right angles to the body of the figurine). You comb out hair and wrap it over the leveled twig. You turban her with bands. You cover (her with) makeshift sashes (and) outer garments. You gird her with a cord on her hips. You wrap her arms and forearms with bindings. You thread carnelian on a multicolored cord which a woman twined. You put it on her neck and you put a silver diadem on her h[ea]d."⁸³⁷

The result of all this artistic effort⁸³⁸ was a miniature woman who was imagined as a gift "wife" for the ghost.⁸³⁹ Since the ghost was attached to the patient, it was a simple matter to accomplish this "marriage" by enacting a mock wedding between the figurine and the patient, complete with a "dowry".

"[For three days] she lies [o]n the bed with him [and] his (real) wife (sleeps) apart. [On] the left [side(?)] of the bed for three days [he t]rea[ts h]er like a w[if]e, [while eating bread], he brings [the bread] he is eating near to her and h[e say]s as follows to her: 'Eat this! You are my substitute.' He brings the [food porti]on he is taking into his mouth near to her and [he says to her as follows(?)]: "It will be given to you." While drinking beer, he brings [the beer] he is taking into his mouth near to her and [he s]ays to her: 'Drink!'. On the third day, [h]e raises up water with emmer warmed in the sun (etc.)⁸⁴⁰ [. . .]. He gives her a bed frame and a chair."⁸⁴¹

The furniture in question would not be inappropriate dowry gifts. However, since chairs (and beds) also play prominent parts in burial rituals and in offerings to ghosts,⁸⁴² the choice of these particular items as gifts for the figurine was probably not accidental. Meanwhile, the āšipu had been setting out travel provisions for the ghost and his new wife for their journey home to the Netherworld.

“You set out [. . . win]no[wed] groats, beerbread, malt porridge [(and) . . . be]fore her. Before Šamaš you say as follows. (Addressing the figurine): ‘You have been provisioned. A dowry has been given to you. Little dwarf(?), you have been completely fitted out. As the substitute and in the stead of [NN so]n of NN you have been given. The evi[l confusional stat]e (causing ghost or) mukīl rēš lemutti-demon [which] was set [on] NN son of NN – he is your husband. You are given [t]o him (as wife). You may take him from the body of NN son of NN and go away.’ (Addressing the ghost or demon): ‘Li[ke] the lion of Šamaš, prey upon her!’”⁸⁴³

It would now be the hapless dwarf wife and not the patient who would bear the brunt of any ghostly ill will. The marriage does not sound like a very happy one, but that was hardly the patient’s problem.

“At the edge of a wall, you open wide her drainage hole. You as[si]gn her (to it) together with her travel provisions. [You] make her enter the drainage hole [to]gether with [her travel provisions] and [you make] her face the setting sun. [Yo]u present (the contents) of ruqqu-bowls (as an offering). You [mak]e a (miniature) bed. You put (it) before her. You close the face (of the hole) with clay.”⁸⁴⁴

With the “happy couple” safely immured, all that remained was to administer a ritual oath and to carry out a few final dissociative actions. Noteworthy is the āšipu’s fear that the ghost will leave the patient as required, but that the result will be merely a transfer of the problem to himself.

“You mix [together] clay and sahlû and (with it) you draw fourteen lines toward the tassels(?) of the curtain[s of hi]s [bed]. You say as follows: ‘Anything evil [shall] n[ot g]o after me; anything evil [shall] n[ot be boun]d after me.’ (Addressing the ghost or demon): ‘You have been provided with food rations. You have been provisioned. You have been made to take (a wife). Y[ou] are her [h]usband. You may take your wife and go away. From the body of NN son of NN you are expelled; you are banished; you are removed and driven away. By the o[at]h of heaven and earth [. . .] and . . . [. . .]’ You wash(?) [his] things. [. . . You pass] the reed torch [by him] You remove [the offering arrangement].”⁸⁴⁵

Ritual Dispatch

In addition to ghost prescriptions which involve the burial of a figurine, there are a number of texts in which the figurine was not buried but was otherwise gotten rid of.⁸⁴⁶ Like burials, dispatches typically took place in the late afternoon or at sundown⁸⁴⁷ so that the ghost might be symbolically sent down (like the sun) to the Netherworld. Before such a figurine was disposed of, it might be given food offerings or provisions for up to three days.⁸⁴⁸ These included groats, malt, beerbread, and dried bread.⁸⁴⁹ The figurine might also receive hot broth.⁸⁵⁰ In order to cement its relationship with the patient, he might be instructed to sleep with the figurine for several nights⁸⁵¹ or, at the very least, to raise it before Šamaš.⁸⁵²

The ghost to be dispatched could not expect such hospitality to continue forever. To make sure that he understood that he was really not welcome, the figurine might then be chained⁸⁵³ or subjected to a forced oath⁸⁵⁴ or fastened to a tree.⁸⁵⁵

“If a ghost afflicts a person (so that) his ears roar, you purify yourself on a favorable day; he (the patient) bathes in well water. You go to the steppe; you sweep the ground with a palm frond. You make a figurine of the sickness out of clay from a potter’s pit. You clothe it with a makeshift garment. In groups of seven and seven, you put out a food portion for it. You tie a spindle, carpeting, (and) a pin at its head. You set up a reed altar before Šamaš. You pour out dates (and) sasqû-flour. You set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper. You set up an adagurru-vessel. You put that figurine before Šamaš. You say as follows. (Recitation: Father Enki, etc.)”⁸⁵⁶

The gifts of a spindle, carpeting and pin which the figurine receives are specifically female attributes, which might imply that the troublesome spirit was female. It is interesting to note in this connection that the problem to be treated was roaring in the ears such as might be produced by a nagging spouse. After the recitation, the text continues.

“You recite this recitation three times over (it). You cut off its hem. You provide it (with) provisions (consisting of) groats, malt, beerbread, (and) dried bread. You take that figurine and bind it to a bīnu-tamarisk and you make it swear.⁸⁵⁷ . . .”

This ritual takes advantage of the fact that attacking demons of the opposite sex were not infrequently described as “choosing” their victims (as a marriage partner).⁸⁵⁸ Given this situation, the obvious solution to the problem was to “divorce” the ghost figurine from the patient by cutting off its hem⁸⁵⁹ and to “marry” it to an obliging tree by the simple expedient of tying the two of them together. This provides an interesting contrast to the burial ritual, quoted above, in which a (masculine) ghost was given a figurine wife as “substitute” for the patient.

In one dispatch ritual, a ghost figurine was even threatened with a reed torch.

“If a ghost afflicts a person, stays continu[ously] in (his) body [and can not be dispelled], and he continually has confusional states (caused by) a ghost [. . .] Its ritual: In late afternoon, you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pure water. You set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper. You pour out a libation of beer. You mix clay from a potter’s pit, tallow, (and) wax together and then you make a figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost. You put an ox horn on it. You give it a human face. On the left shoulder, you write its name: ‘Figurine of the confusional state(-causing)-ghost (or) evil sickness which afflicts NN, son of NN’. Towards Šamaš, the patient raises that figurine to his left and then to his right he ties a knot. The recitation: “Šamaš, this (is) the representation of the confusional state (causing ghost)”⁸⁶⁰ you have him say three times and then you put it (the figurine) in a burzigallu-vessel. You raise a reed torch and then you have him recite the recitation: ‘Girra you are mighty, you are furious’⁸⁶¹ three times. You untie the knot before him. You prostrate yourself and then you throw the burnt material into waste land and he will get well.”⁸⁶²

What was supposed to be happening is not entirely clear from the instructions but, to judge from the fact that the second recitation is also attested as part of Maqlû (II 129–130), one presumes that the contents of the burzigallu-vessel were ignited with the torch.⁸⁶³ Since the figurine was made of tallow and wax as well as of clay, it would have partially melted in the process, thus separating the “self” or essence of the ghost (the clay) and the trouble he was causing, represented, as the previous example which we have quoted above,⁸⁶⁴ by wax and tallow. The desired “loosening” of the patient’s illness was signalled by the tying and untying of a magic knot, actions which frame the invocation of the god Girra as if to say: “I was tied (before the figurine was torched); I want to be untied (afterwards)”. The disposal of the burnt material in the waste would have served to dismiss any residual harmful influences to the Netherworld.

Such extreme methods were used only with strange ghosts. Family ghosts got much better treatment. Although still subjected to forced oaths,⁸⁶⁵ their figurines were honored⁸⁶⁶ and given a boat in which to travel downstream back to their homes in the Netherworld.⁸⁶⁷

Unrelated ghosts sometimes rated equal consideration.⁸⁶⁸

“For an attack of a confusional state (causing ghost) or a rā[bišu-demon], you make [two figurines of tamarisk] which are a cubit long each. [You p]ut on one the head [of an ox (and) human hands and feet]. On the other, [you put] a head like the representation of Gilgameš. You say: ‘You are [the rābišu-demon which seized N]N (or) the evil ghost which was set on NN. [Y]ou [have been provided with(?)] a boat.’ You tell them their names.”⁸⁶⁹

Making a ghost figurine of tamarisk is otherwise unparalleled. Usually wooden figurines, and those made of the “bone of divinity” (tamarisk) in particular,⁸⁷⁰ represented friendly spirits whose help was being enlisted to keep the evil away and who were buried at specific places in the house in order to protect it.⁸⁷¹ Unique also to this ritual is the care which was taken to make the statuette a specific representation of an individuated ghost or demon. This, when combined with the absence of any mention of writing the names onto the figurines, may confirm our suspicion that this latter practice was intended as a form of specification necessary to make an amorphous lump of clay actually represent a specific ghost or demon. A further unusual feature was the manufacture of not one but seven substitute figurines perhaps, with Schwemer,⁸⁷² representing the seven days which were required to carry out the ritual.

“You make [seven substitu]te [figur]ines of clay from the potter’s pit. You gird a ŠÀ.GADA-sash round (them). [You wra]p th[em] with . . . For seven days, you seat them [at] the head of the patient. On the seventh day, you make them board a sailboat made from ša[lālu(?)]-reed. You make the two figurines of tamarisk and the seven substitute figurines board (it). You make them swear an oath (by) the great gods of heaven and earth. . . .⁸⁷³ You say this three times. You make a [sacrifice] . . . flour [. . .] You dispatch the boat. [. . .]”⁸⁷⁴

Other Surrogates

In three other prescriptions⁸⁷⁵ animals or pieces of bread⁸⁷⁶ were substituted for the figurine.

“If a person’s face seems to spin (and) says: ‘Oh, my insides!,’ his insides rumble, his epigastrium continually protrudes (and) he loses his appetite for bread and beer, before he lingers and dies, you slaughter a caged chicken/goose over his abdomen. While tearing out the heart of the chicken/goose and putting it over his abdomen, the āšipu lays his hands on him (the patient) and says as follows: ‘Remove the evil ghost; remove the evil ghost so that it does not approach the person’s body. May it (the heart) chase away whatever is evil for him (the patient).’”⁸⁷⁷

The object of laying the bird’s heart on the patient’s heart was, as the recitation shows, to draw out the evil from one heart, as it were, to the other.⁸⁷⁸ The heart was then trapped in a hole with a special dough reinforced by a magical salve.

“He says (this) seven times and while he removes the bird’s heart and lays it on the ground, a woman who is past childbearing age picks (it) up and (does so) without looking behind her. The āšipu says: ‘It is time for the opener to come’ behind her seven times and while he places the heart in a hole on the west(!)⁸⁷⁹ (side), she closes its (the hole’s) opening with dough made from šigūšu-flour and (does so) without looking behind her.”⁸⁸⁰

In the process of the ritual, the bird will obviously have died. What happened to the meat is not stated, but the blood, gizzard rind and fat were saved for further use. Putting part of the blood in a salve to be applied to the patient and the remainder in a mixture to be smeared on the hole’s opening is reminiscent of the use of part of a batch of a medicinal plant mixture in a potion (etc.) and using the rest for an amulet (for which see below).

“He cooks the blood of that chicken/goose, the “rind” of the gizzard, and its fat. He mixes (it) with “human semen” and rubs it onto his (the patient’s) abdomen. While taking the blood of that chicken/goose, he mixes it with šigūšu-flour and then, while mixing earth from the Ištar temple and magnetite together, he smears (the mixture) on its (the hole’s) opening (with) a virgin female [la]mb’s [wool] and then (as a result) it (the ghost) will not return to hurt him (the patient) intensely.”⁸⁸¹

The use of šigūšu-flour for manufacturing the dough and salve was no doubt dictated by the fact that this particular flour was considered an appropriate offering for ghosts.⁸⁸² The magnetite and dirt from the temple of a goddess responsible for physical (sexual) attraction would, no doubt, have caused the ghost to be irresistibly, magnetically attracted into the hole. The instruction to not look behind would, then, have been designed to ensure that the evil did not escape in the process.⁸⁸³ A second prescription seems to have used a shrew as a surrogate. This was bound to the patient, presumably in hopes that it would pick up the pain in his side.⁸⁸⁴ Another prescription in which bread was divided in half and laid on the patients’ head was probably intended to serve a similar purpose.⁸⁸⁵

Of the twenty-four figurine or other surrogate prescriptions, five⁸⁸⁶ were for unspecified uses. Of the rest, eight⁸⁸⁷ were directed against apparitions. One was used for roaring in the ears,⁸⁸⁸ one for pains on one side,⁸⁸⁹ one for ghosts in the intestines.⁸⁹⁰ Five were for neurological disorders or mental disturbance.⁸⁹¹ The remaining three⁸⁹² were for complexes of symptoms including headaches (plus) or confusional states.

Magic circles have already been encountered in the discussion of figurine prescriptions. There, the typical use was to encircle the buried figurine, thus ensuring that the ghost did not escape and return to trouble the patient.⁸⁹³ The same principle (usually involving only a partial or symbolic encirclement) was occasionally used to provide a cordon of magical protection around the patient,⁸⁹⁴ or to trap the afflicting spirit in situ and to force him to agree to the cure. Prescriptions of this sort are rare, but there are six of them.⁸⁹⁵

“If ditto ([he sees an apparition]), you mix ru’tītu-sulphur, imbû tām̄ti, kiškanû, elikulla, (and) bitumen with erēnu-cedar oil. If you repeatedly smear [the gate] of the house where he (the patient) lives, the door, the bolt, the sides of his bed, his [tab]le (and) his reed mat (with it), he will not see (any more ghosts).”⁸⁹⁶

In this prescription, a specially prepared salve was applied to ghostproof the entrance to the patient’s house. The bitumen, at least, was probably employed in this salve due to its use in waterproofing boats. For good measure, the patient was surrounded with a magic circle made from ašāgu- and baltu-thorn.

“‘You, dead person who meets with me . . . <when [you] approach my [be]d>, may baltu-thornbush hold you back, may ašāgu-thorn hold you back, may the magic circle hold you back. May you not return like nearby cl[o]uds, may you not ditto . . . behind you di[tto . . .]’ You pour sweet oil over the baltu-thorn (and) ašāgu-thorn (and) the magic circle. He recites the recitation seven times. You surround (him) with a magic circle. You must not look behind you. [When you have done this], you [have him say as fo]llows. ‘Ghos[t] who meets with me . . . do not approach, do not come close to my bed. May the wall hold you back, may the door of my gate turn back your breast at the command of Ea, Šamaš, (and) the āšipu among the gods, Asalluḫi.’ ‘By heaven may you swear, by earth may you swear. May it (the oath) never release (you). When you have sworn, may Anzagar who looses what is bound remove and turn away your breast. He has bound (it).’⁸⁹⁷

Of the two accompanying recitations, one is primarily addressed to the family ghosts, and the other to strangers. Since the former set of spirits were thought to reside in the house, there would have been little point in putting something at the door to keep them out, which is presumably why their recitation is associated with the small scale circle drawn round the patient. The baltu- and ašāgu-thorn were, no doubt, designed to painfully prick any demonic feet attempting to cross over to afflict the patient. The injunction to the āšipu not to look behind him avoided the possibility that some determined ghost might escape the cordon sanitaire.

Partial or symbolic encirclement of the patient presented the afflicting ghost with a no-win choice; he could make a quick getaway or he could stay and be trapped into doing what he was told. In either case, the patient would be cured.

“If a person continually has headaches, his ears roar, his eyes become dimmed, his neck muscles continually hurt him, his arm(s) are continually numb, the small of his back gives him a jabbing pain, his heart is troubled, (and) his feet continually have rimūtu-paralysis, a pursuing ghost continually pursues that person. To cure him, on the fifteenth, the day when Sîn and Šamaš stand together, you dress that person in sackcloth. You make an incision in his temple with a flint knife and draw his blood.”⁸⁹⁸

An interesting feature of this particular text is the instruction to have the patient put on sackcloth and submit to being bled, both modified mourning rites⁸⁹⁹ presumably designed to enlist the sympathy of the gods to whom the attached prayers made appeal. The placement of censers of cedar and cypress to the right and left of the patient and the invocation of the setting moon and rising sun created a symbolic horizontal and vertical encirclement of the patient, while simultaneously enlisting the assistance of the twin gods in ensuring it.

“You have him sit in a reed hut. You have him face north. To Sîn, towards the setting sun, you set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper. You make a libation of cow’s milk. Toward Šamaš, toward the rising sun, you set up a censer (burning) šurmēnu-cypress. You pour out a libation of beer. That person says as follows: ‘To my left is Sîn, moon crescent of the great heavens. To my right is the father of the black headed ones, Šamaš, the judge, both gods, fathers of the great gods, makers of decisions for the widespread people, an evil wind has blown upon me and a pursuing ghost continually pursues me. I am truly grieved, confused and troubled. <I kneel?> for your judgment; save me so that I may not be wronged.’ He says (this) seven times and then he emerges from the reed hut and removes his garment (and) puts on a clean garment. To Sîn, he says as follows: ‘Sîn, light of heaven and earth, rem[ove] the unpleasant sickness from my body.’ He says

(this) three times and then, to Šamaš, he sa[ys] as follows: “Šamaš, great judge, father of the blackheaded ones, let the evil wind that put it there(?) go up like smoke to heaven and let me praise you.’ If he says this three times, it (the ghost) will not . . .⁹⁰⁰

Another variety of encirclement took advantage of the fact that the human body has only so many entrances, and thus provides a ready made trap for an infesting spirit.

“‘[Nap]iršeriš, <patar>ri, zugalirri, paṭhalli, patarri, sumaš, patri, pakundi, rataš, ikkiriri, šaraš/daraḥ.’ [Recitation (for cases) where a person’s ears ro]ar. You say/sing (it) three times [into] his [righ]t [ear] (and) three times into his left ear.”⁹⁰¹

“‘Watchful watcher who tracks down everything, whatever was created in the earth (or) the spawn of heaven, for (the evil) not to approach his (the patient’s) shape or form (any more than one could approach) heaven, for the hero utterly to destroy (them), to completely remove(?) them from his (the patient’s) shape or form, [to put] the ghost/demon on the path(?), to put the ghost/demon on the road – when you go there by your[self(?)], when you go there by yourself, Ninurta, king of the weapon, let it (the weapon) be put before you to smash the evil. May it sw[ear] by heaven. May it swear [b]y earth.’ Recitation (for cases) where a person[’s] ear[s] roar]. You recite (it) three times into his right ear (and) three times into his left ear.”⁹⁰²

“‘Amiamman, kummamma, summatri/kumatri, kiriri, kukti, <rašana, kukti>, ḥundi, ḥumman.’ [Recitation] (for cases) where his ears roar. A whispered prayer into his left ear.”⁹⁰⁴

In these examples, the possessory ghost is trapped and forced into complying by the simple expedient of saying the same recitation (or in the last examples two separate recitations) into the patient’s right and left ears.

Magic encirclement was only rarely applied to ghost problems and then, apart from spoken prayers for roaring in the ears,⁹⁰⁵ only to apparitions⁹⁰⁶ or to headaches (plus).⁹⁰⁷ Their use was thus similar to, but even more limited than, the figurine or other surrogate prescriptions.

Amulets⁹⁰⁸

The corpus of ancient Mesopotamian magico-medical texts includes seventy-five instructions for the manufacture of protective necklaces, bracelets, etc.⁹⁰⁹ It is conventional to regard such prescriptions as “pure magic”. However, there is nothing obviously “magical” about most of the ingredients used in ghost amulets. On the contrary, they usually contain the same sorts of medicinal herbs, flours, ground-up stones, and oils one finds in bandages for headaches and swollen eyes, salves for sore necks, enemas for stomach upset, and the like. As to how such ostensibly medical recipes came to be used as amulets, the most obvious source is the not uncommon practice of supplementing salves, potions and even fumigants with an amulet composed of the same ingredients⁹¹⁰ – rather like taking an aspirin for headache and then wearing the rest of the bottle as a necklace.

“You rub (it on him) in oil, and then you put (it) around his neck in a leather bag.”⁹¹¹

“If ditto, licorice root (etc.) in beer, in oil, in a leather bag.”⁹¹²

“You fumigate him (with it) over coals. (You put it) in a leather bag.”⁹¹³

Doubtless the idea was to hold part of the medicine, as it were, hostage to guarantee that the rest of the medicine would behave and do its job. Another possible reason for wearing medicine as a “charm” would be to ensure that the ghost whom one had chased away did not return the next day to reafflict the patient. Finally, one could always use the medicine prophylactically, that is, one could put on the charm to avoid getting one’s headache in the first place. In either of the last two cases, the “charm” might be presumed either to buy off the ghost or to remind him of previous unpleasant experiences with the medicine which he would now be inclined to avoid, as with birds and brightly colored caterpillars.

In any case, the packaging of the amulets for the most part looks “magical” enough. The simplest procedure required only that the ingredients be put in a leather bag which was then worn round the patient’s neck.⁹¹⁴ Usually the type of leather was not specified but, when it was, the rule was for one type of animal to be used for the bag itself and another for the lacings.⁹¹⁵ The leather for the bag is also sometimes said specifically to be taken from an animal which died (of natural causes),⁹¹⁶ a not inappropriate choice to ward off a ghost.

Alternatively, the ingredients could be formed into a burl or burls by being wrapped⁹¹⁷ in a tuft of wool⁹¹⁸ or red-dyed wool.⁹¹⁹ Where the wool was dry, the tuft was simply another version of the leather bag. However, some of these wool tufts were wet, either because they were smeared with cedar resin⁹²⁰ or because the ingredients contained cedar oil⁹²¹ or other lubricants,⁹²² a fact which would have made it possible for some of the medicine to seep out of the “amulet” and onto the patient’s skin⁹²³ – another good reason never to be too hasty to assume a purely “magical” effect for “magical” procedures.

Stones⁹²⁴ were likely to be threaded on a cord and made into a proper necklace, with or without burls strung between the stones.⁹²⁵ Particularly favored for making necklaces in ghost prescriptions were cords made from two materials of contrasting colors such as red and white wool⁹²⁶ or red wool and gazelle tendon⁹²⁷ twined together.⁹²⁸ Sometimes, three different materials were used.⁹²⁹ Most elaborate, and most obviously “magical”, of amulet prescriptions are the knotting spells, which involved the preparation of a necklace whose cord was knotted with knots in multiples of seven.⁹³⁰ Of these, there are four more or less complete examples, three of which are fitted with particularly tortuous Sumerian recitations.⁹³¹

“‘Utu, king of the ghosts : ghost . . . who releases the mouth that is bound; : you are the one who releases the mouth. Utu, together with Anzagar and Mamu, you are the one who binds . . . Together with Anzagar and Mamu, you are the one who alters things for the good. The spell spoken by Enki, stag of the Abzu, stag of the Abzu, great lord Utu – let it change its place. The oath sworn by the gods together with Anzagar and effusive Mamu, Ereškigal, (and) Ninazu – let it not release it. May Nergal bind it with a band.’ Recitation (to be used) if a dead person meets with a living person for evil purposes, to keep him away so that he does not see him. Its ritual: You twine together carded wool and red-dyed wool. You ti[e] seven knots. You mix together erēnu-cedar oil, blood from a man’s nose, flour made from šigūšu-grain, earth from an old grave, the tip of a needle, šaš[šūgu]-wood, earth from the roots of a baltu-thorn, (and) earth from an anthill. You sprinkle (it on) the knots. Whenever you tie (a knot), you recite the recitation. [You bind (the knotted wool)] on [his] templ[e]. You have him say as follows. ‘Until the red co[m]es to look white (and) the white to look dyed red, may the ghost who meets with me not return and at the watch of the 29th no[t meet] with me.’ If you know it, you write his name. If in the night or during the whole da[y . . .]”⁹³²

As the recitation in this prescription makes clear, the purpose of using contrasting colors in the thread was to indicate the desired separation between the patient and his ghostly tormenter. The inclusion in the amulet of the name of the ghost (where the patient had succeeded in recognizing him) made sure that the message was received. The end section is broken, but presumably included the instruction to repeat the tying ritual if the ghost came back again (see below).

“‘[The neck] mus[cles] are [sore]; the ruined neck muscles are sore. [“Hand” of ghos]t continually gores (them). [The king of the god]s, Asalluḫi, son of Eridu (and) [Nindin]ugga, mistress of the spoken spell continually put an end to the sore neck muscles of men.’ Recitation (for cases where) as a result of affliction by a ghost his neck hurts (him). Its ritual: you take fourteen sahḫū-stones. You thread (them) on a multi-colored strand. “Lone-plant”, tarmuš, “cures a thousand”, “cures twenty”, kibrītu-sulphur, ru’tītu-sulphur, (and) šimrānu. These seven plants you wind into burls in red-dyed wool between them. You tie seven knots. Whenever you tie (a knot), you recite the recitation. You smear (it with) erēnu-cedar resin. You put (it) on his neck.”⁹³³

The use of knotting spells to deal with problems of “knotted” muscles seems particularly apt. Note that in this and the following examples, the amulet was tied directly on to the offending muscles.

“É.NU.RU recitation: ‘To make well the evil sinew for that man, that man; to make well the bound sinew, its matter, its matter to lay before the lord, to lay before the lady. (How) to make the bound sinew well for that man I (Asalluḫi) looked into (the matter). My father (Enki), I myself looked into it. For the lord, the hearer, having performed a divination, to the lord who did not know what to do, the he<arer> answered. Enki answered his son. Nindinugga, king of the gods, Nindinugg[a], foremost of the gods, Nindinugg[a], son of Ninazu, father Enki (answered) . . . Asalluḫi. Asalluḫ[i], you are the good king of the down trodden. Asallu[ḫi], never release what must be seized. By heaven ma[y you swear; b]y earth may you swear.’ Recitation for ‘hand of ghost’. Its ritual: You twine red wool (and) white wool together into a cord. You thread seven “male” šû-stones (on it). You wind kibrîtu-sulphur, ru’tîtu-sulphur, imbû tâmti (and) sikillu into seven burls. You tie seven and seven knots. Whenever you tie a knot, you recite the recitation. <[Also] whenever you recite (and)> whenever (you wind) a burl, [you sprinkle] pure oil.⁹³⁴ You tie it on his side (or) wherever it hurts him. [If] you recite [the recitation ov]er his side, [he will get well].⁹³⁵

“Šamaš, king of heaven and earth; Šamaš, judge of the lands; Šamaš, foremost of the gods; Šamaš, mighty (and) resplendent one; Šamaš, you are the lord who makes (things) go aright. The evil of day, month, and year; Lamaštu, Labašu, Aḥḥāzu, . . ., anything evil, human [de]pression, . . .’ Recitation for the sting of a ghost. Its ritual: (In) a censer, you scatter burāšu-juniper on ašāgu-thorn charcoal before Šamaš. You libate miḥḫu-beer. You twine together the hair of a virgin she-goat (and) the hair of a virgin <lamb> (into) a cord. You tie three knots seven times. Whenever you tie (them), you recite (this) recitation three times before Šamaš. You bind (it on) him wherever it stings him. He will get well within a month and then, to keep it from hurting him intensely (again), you loosen these knots and tie them again⁹³⁶ a second time.⁹³⁷

Amulets are remarkable for their versatility; there is almost nothing which could be attributed to a ghost’s influence which could not be dealt with prophylactically. Included are thirty-six prescriptions for apparitions and various types of headaches,⁹³⁸ two for eye problems,⁹³⁹ one for ear problems,⁹⁴⁰ nine for ghostly pains,⁹⁴¹ two for numbness,⁹⁴² nine for vertigo and/or shortness of breath,⁹⁴³ one for chills,⁹⁴⁴ two for neurological disorders,⁹⁴⁵ and thirteen for unspecified ailments.⁹⁴⁶ The only major omission from this list are the various prescriptions for internal problems.

Fumigants

For the sixty-six fumigant prescriptions,⁹⁴⁷ ingredients were collected and, if necessary, crushed or ground together⁹⁴⁸ or mixed with a flammable liquid⁹⁴⁹ before being burned over coals.⁹⁵⁰ One presumes that ordinarily some sort of incense burner was used, but occasionally it is specified that the fumigants are to be burned in a human skull.⁹⁵¹ Generally, it is simply stated that the patient is to be fumigated,⁹⁵² but in some cases the healer is instructed to direct the smoke to specific areas of the patient’s body⁹⁵³ such as the eyes⁹⁵⁴ or ears⁹⁵⁵ or nostrils.⁹⁵⁶ In two cases at least, the fumigation was used as an accompaniment to other treatment.⁹⁵⁷

Many of the ingredients used for fumigation were normal medicaments but there are some suspicious looking inclusions.⁹⁵⁸ Fumigants intended to treat the ears often contain horse hair⁹⁵⁹ and/or soiled menstrual rags.⁹⁶⁰ Fumigants for shortness of breath might contain dust from tombs,⁹⁶¹ or instruct that the ašāgu-thorn which was being applied as a medicament be one which had sprouted on a tomb.⁹⁶² Note also the specification in a headache fumigant that the bone is to be a human skull⁹⁶³ or that the caul fat is to be taken from the left kidney⁹⁶⁴ of a black ox.⁹⁶⁵ Other fumigants contain green frogs,⁹⁶⁶ bits of corpses,⁹⁶⁷ animal hides,⁹⁶⁸ various types of hair,⁹⁶⁹ and stag horn.⁹⁷⁰ It should, however, be noted that what looks “suspicious” to us may have a perfectly valid medical reason behind it. One would hardly suspect that snake skin⁹⁷¹ could be anything but a “magical” ingredient, yet scientific tests have shown it to contain zinc and titanium oxide in medically significant quantities.⁹⁷² Neither should we allow negative attitudes to natural bodily functions to obscure the potential medical uses of urine and various types of excrement.⁹⁷³

The fact that fumigations (apart, of course, from the incense burned in connection with divine meals) seem never to have been used to rid a patient of apparitions, would seem to suggest that the principle behind them was something more than a simple fuga daemonorum. Indeed, fumigants were used for headaches (6)⁹⁷⁴ or for eye problems (1)⁹⁷⁵ or for ringing or roaring in the ears (13)⁹⁷⁶ or for intestinal gas (1)⁹⁷⁷ or for shortness of breath (2)⁹⁷⁸ or for stiff neck with wasting (1)⁹⁷⁹ or for unspecified ailments (42).⁹⁸⁰

Bandages

The forty-one bandages⁹⁸¹ were manufactured by crushing⁹⁸² and sifting⁹⁸³ ingredients and decocting them in kasû juice,⁹⁸⁴ beer,⁹⁸⁵ wine,⁹⁸⁶ milk,⁹⁸⁷ vinegar,⁹⁸⁸ or urine(?)⁹⁸⁹ or simply by mixing them together.⁹⁹⁰ Such mixtures could be applied hot⁹⁹¹ or cold; if they were too wet, flour might be sprinkled on before bandaging.⁹⁹² Sometimes, chafing was prevented by lubricating the skin first.⁹⁹³ For the bandage proper, cloth⁹⁹⁴ or leather⁹⁹⁵ was used. For headaches (36 examples), the bandage was wrapped round the head⁹⁹⁶ or temples.⁹⁹⁷ Effectiveness could be increased by shaving the patient's head before bandaging.⁹⁹⁸ For ear problems (2 examples), the bandage was presumably bound round the ears.⁹⁹⁹ For ghostly pains (2 examples), the bandage was applied directly to the hurting area.¹⁰⁰⁰

Salves

The eighty-four salves¹⁰⁰¹ were manufactured by mixing the listed ingredients with oil or resin.¹⁰⁰² Where appropriate, the healer was instructed to char,¹⁰⁰³ crush or grind them first.¹⁰⁰⁴ Occasionally, the mixture was allowed to sit overnight to ensure that the ingredients melded.¹⁰⁰⁵ An interesting feature of ancient Mesopotamian salves was the use of crushed stone grit¹⁰⁰⁶ to help ensure that the salve would penetrate the skin, particularly in eye preparations and in headache remedies which were applied to the forehead and eyes.¹⁰⁰⁷ Most of the ingredients used in the salves are not obviously “magical”; however, in the apparition salves, “dust from a human skull” is a not uncommon ingredient,¹⁰⁰⁸ no doubt inspired by the context.¹⁰⁰⁹

Usually it is simply stated that the salve is to be rubbed on the patient.¹⁰¹⁰ Particular afflictions were, however, characterized by special practices. Headache salves (17) were rubbed on the patient’s temples¹⁰¹¹ or daubed on the eyes.¹⁰¹² Eye salves (6) were rubbed¹⁰¹³ or daubed¹⁰¹⁴ on the eyes. In one eye prescription, there is mention of a “peg of lead”, probably used as an applicator.¹⁰¹⁵ Neckache salves (2) were rubbed on the neck and/or body.¹⁰¹⁶ Ghostly pain salves (14) were rubbed on the sore spot.¹⁰¹⁷ Salves for internal pain (1) were rubbed on the abdomen.¹⁰¹⁸ Salves for fever? (1) were rubbed on the head and the soles of the feet.¹⁰¹⁹ Salves for stiff neck with wasting (1) were rubbed on the neck.¹⁰²⁰ Salves to guard against apparitions (17) were often rubbed on the soles of the feet first thing in the morning before the patient got out of bed (and trod on the ground)¹⁰²¹ or on the head and feet.¹⁰²² This practice was doubtless inspired by the common notion that the soles of the feet are an access road into the body for unfriendly spirits.¹⁰²³ Apparition salves are also the only ones to be accompanied by offerings¹⁰²⁴ and, even here, the usage is exceptional. There were also salves for ghosts in the intestines (7),¹⁰²⁵ vertigo and/or shortness of breath (4)¹⁰²⁶ and neurological disorders (2)¹⁰²⁷ as well as for unspecified ailments (11).¹⁰²⁸

Potions

For the thirty-two potions,¹⁰²⁹ the ingredients were usually dissolved in beer.¹⁰³⁰ If necessary, they might be ground or crushed and sifted first.¹⁰³¹ Exceptionally, they might be decocted overnight in water or vinegar.¹⁰³² Only in rare cases did potions contain suspiciously “magical”-looking ingredients.¹⁰³³ When recommendations are made, the potion is supposed to be drunk on an empty stomach.¹⁰³⁴ Potions were used to treat apparitions (7),¹⁰³⁵ throbbing headaches (1)¹⁰³⁶ or headaches accompanied by vertigo (1)¹⁰³⁷ or eye problems (1)¹⁰³⁸ or intestinal gas (1)¹⁰³⁹ or nausea (1)¹⁰⁴⁰ or hurting insides (3)¹⁰⁴¹ or hot and “gnawing” epigastrium (2)¹⁰⁴² or colic with depression (1)¹⁰⁴³ as well as for unspecified ailments (14).¹⁰⁴⁴

Washes

For the eighteen washes,¹⁰⁴⁵ the ingredients were ground,¹⁰⁴⁶ and mixed with pure water¹⁰⁴⁷ or oil¹⁰⁴⁸ or a mixture of oil and other liquids¹⁰⁴⁹ before being used to wash the affected part of the body.¹⁰⁵⁰ Alternatively, the liquid could be poured or blown into a body orifice using a straw.¹⁰⁵¹ Washes were used to treat flashes in the eyes¹⁰⁵² (1) and roaring or inflammation in the ears¹⁰⁵³ (5) or intestinal gas¹⁰⁵⁴ (3) or unspecified ailments (9).¹⁰⁵⁵ For lower body baths and some enemas, the ingredients were baked in stale urine in an oven¹⁰⁵⁶ or boiled in beer¹⁰⁵⁷ or urine¹⁰⁵⁸ and filtered¹⁰⁵⁹ and allowed to cool¹⁰⁶⁰ before use. If an enema was not immediately effective, it might be repeated up to three times.¹⁰⁶¹ It might also help to follow one enema with another composed of different ingredients.¹⁰⁶²

Suppositories

For the fourteen suppositories,¹⁰⁶³ the ingredients were ground¹⁰⁶⁴ or crushed and sifted¹⁰⁶⁵ and wrapped in a tuft of wool¹⁰⁶⁶ or formed into a finger-shaped pellet by means of sheep fat¹⁰⁶⁷ before being inserted into the relevant orifice.¹⁰⁶⁸ Sometimes, the ingredients were given a chance to meld by being left out overnight.¹⁰⁶⁹ Occasionally, the suppository was boiled in water before insertion.¹⁰⁷⁰ To facilitate matters, the suppository might be lubricated with erēnu-cedar resin.¹⁰⁷¹ Suppositories were used to treat roaring¹⁰⁷² or inflammation¹⁰⁷³ in the ears (13) or intestinal gas (1).¹⁰⁷⁴ Where the roaring or inflammation was caused by an obstruction in the ear canal, the suppository seems to have served as a sort of q-tip.¹⁰⁷⁵

In sum, of the three hundred and forty-eight prescriptions for ghost-related problems, only thirty-five involved the performance of a NAM.BŪR.BI, libations, the manufacture of figurines, or magic encirclement. Although these thirty-five prescriptions represent only a small proportion of the total, they account for all but two of the offerings and other peripherals, show a disproportionate interest in dealing with ghostly screams and apparitions as opposed to physical problems, and seem to involve a much greater degree of patient participation than other types of procedures. As we have seen,¹⁰⁷⁶ these procedures were also distinctive in terms of the legomena which they contained, leading us to the supposition that they might have been more directly concerned with the ghost than with the symptoms which the ghost had produced. The concentration of offerings in procedures of these types and the tendency to employ them to treat problems which involved the ghost in his capacity as a frightening specter rather than an inflicter of headaches or stomach problems would seem to support this conclusion. It remains to make a few preliminary remarks on the subject of the medicaments employed to treat ghost-induced problems.

Chapter 6

MEDICAMENTS

Preliminary remarks

As we have already mentioned,¹⁰⁷⁷ the related questions of just how many of the plants used for “hand” of ghost can be positively identified, and of the medical effectiveness of ancient Mesopotamian treatments for ghost-induced problems will be treated in a separate study. However, a few preliminary remarks are in order here.

One of the most striking features of the ghost prescriptions is the great variety of substances which were employed in treating them. This is hardly surprising considering the variety of ills that ghosts were believed to cause¹⁰⁷⁸ and the fact that, included among these ills were headaches, a problem for which modern pharmacies also offer a great variety of treatments.

Although the instructions are not particularly complicated, and although the prescriptions contain at most twenty-four different ingredients with the majority requiring ten or fewer, when all of the medicaments are listed alphabetically, the numbers add up quite quickly. In all, some 251 trees or plants, stones, minerals, metals, salts, and animal substances were deployed by ancient Mesopotamian healers against troublesome ghosts. Breaking the number down by type, we have 132 plants or trees, forty-four stones (of which sixteen appear only in amulets), twenty-nine minerals, metals, or salts, four kinds of dust, thirty-five animals or animal products including honey, milk, fish oil, garum, hair or bristles and seven different types of excrement, plus several types of oil, water, wine, beer, beer-wort, malt, vinegar and dregs. I hasten to add that the “132 plants or trees” does not count as separate medicaments the not infrequent case in which more than one part of the same plant or tree was utilized (viz leaves but also fruit, seeds or galls, roots, sprouts, bark, sap or resin, juice, distillations, or infusions). Since it is not at all unusual for the chemical composition of different parts of the same plant to vary in medically significant ways, these should properly have been counted separately and, when counted in this way, the number of “plants and trees” rises to 187 for a grand total of 306 substances.

There is nothing obviously “magical” about the majority of these medicaments, even without taking into consideration the fact that powdered snake skin has proven medical properties and that ground stones are useful in ensuring the absorption of ointments,¹⁰⁷⁹ which means that one must be careful not to be too quick to apply the “magic” label to even the most ostensibly “magical” ingredients.¹⁰⁸⁰ Neither was there anything “magical” in the choice of how many ingredients to use; anyone expecting to find three hundred and sixty five prescriptions all with the same number of ingredients, or even all with an odd number of ingredients would be sorely disappointed. There is no obvious way of predicting how many plants will be needed for any particular prescription, and indeed almost every possible number of ingredients between one and twenty-four is attested.

What is more, of the vast arsenal of medicaments arrayed against the spirits of the dead, only a handful had any obvious connections with death, ghosts, or the Netherworld. The well water which is once used to treat sparks in the eyes¹⁰⁸¹ might qualify, since ghosts are known to have been invoked at the dedication of new wells;¹⁰⁸² it should, however, be noted, that well water was also used to treat conditions such as aphasia¹⁰⁸³ and ringworm (PEŠ.GIG)¹⁰⁸⁴ which we have no other reason to suppose had anything to do with ghosts. Similarly, ghost prescriptions make use of dust from a human skull¹⁰⁸⁵ or from an abandoned waste¹⁰⁸⁶ or a crossroads¹⁰⁸⁷ or tomb¹⁰⁸⁸ but these sorts of dust may also be found in prescriptions for gnashing of teeth,¹⁰⁸⁹ strokes affecting the cheek,¹⁰⁹⁰ and continual nervousness and quivering in a baby.¹⁰⁹¹ The same may be said for thornbushes found growing on graves¹⁰⁹² and human bones,¹⁰⁹³ both of which are common enough in ghost prescriptions but both of which also appear elsewhere.¹⁰⁹⁴

Indeed, a preliminary survey of the remaining medical texts points strongly to the conclusion that there were very few, if any, of the ingredients which appear in ghost prescriptions which were never employed to treat conditions not ostensibly caused by ghosts. Take, for example, ^UNU.LUḪ.ḪA/nuḫurtu which is frequently used in ghost prescriptions but which was also used for such non-ghost problems as excess salivation,¹⁰⁹⁵ aphasia,¹⁰⁹⁶ di'u,¹⁰⁹⁷ suālu-cough,¹⁰⁹⁸ internal conditions requiring laxative action,¹⁰⁹⁹ jaundice,¹¹⁰⁰ constriction of the urethra,¹¹⁰¹ and kišpū in one's food.¹¹⁰² Similarly, ^Uaktam/atkam, besides its use for ghost headaches, earaches, bodyaches, and stomach gas, also found uses in remedies for white spots in the eye,¹¹⁰³ painful shins and stiff ankles,¹¹⁰⁴ various varieties of skin disease,¹¹⁰⁵ fever accompanied by hair loss,¹¹⁰⁶ bu'šānu,¹¹⁰⁷ hematuria,¹¹⁰⁸ and retention of lochia.¹¹⁰⁹

In other words, it seems that the plants used for "hand of ghost" were not thought to be exclusive to ghosts but might, if the occasion warranted, also be employed in the treatment of syndromes in which spirits of the dead played no part. This impression can be confirmed in individual cases, where the apparently non-ghostly symptoms being treated with ghost prescription plants are explicitly stated to be due to non-ghostly causes. Thus, for example, BAM 579 i 40–44 // BAM 52: 39–44 // BAM 67: 1'–9' // BAM 156: 21–24 contains fifteen ingredients all of which are known from ghost prescriptions, but the emetic potion which results is described as a maš-qit NAM.ÉRIM.BÚR.RU.DA.KE₄ ("drink for a curse"). Two of three ingredients in a prescription for a seizure induced by a gallû (ḪUL)¹¹¹⁰ also appear in ghost prescriptions. Fourteen of the fifteen ingredients in a prescription for excess salivation, spraying spit, teeth hurting(?), stuttering and hiccups due to "having been fed deceitful things"¹¹¹¹ are equally ghostly. Similarly, all but one of twenty-four ingredients to combat kišpū (sorcery)¹¹¹² and all of eight ingredients in a potion for ZI.KU₅.RU.DA ("cutting of the breath") practiced over the door bolt¹¹¹³ also appear in ghost prescriptions. Most of the ingredients used to treat muruṣ kabbarti brought on by (accidentally) stepping in dirty bath water¹¹¹⁴ or on a cult socle¹¹¹⁵ are also recognizable from ghost prescriptions.

It does not, however, follow that there is no pattern to the use of medicaments. On the contrary, it is not at all uncommon to have the same ingredients appearing again and again in similar contexts. Thus, for example, ZAG.Ḫ.LI^{SAR}/sahlû appears in no fewer than twelve ghost prescriptions for headache of which seven were specifically intended for migraine.¹¹¹⁶ Equally ubiquitous in treating ghost-induced headache are GAZI^{SAR}/kasû and A GAZI^{SAR}/mê kasî which between them figure in thirteen prescriptions.¹¹¹⁷ Other favorable medicaments include ZĪD ŠE.SA.A¹¹¹⁸ and KĪ.A.^dĪD/kibrītu or ŪḪ.^dĪD/ruʾtītu with ten,¹¹¹⁹ KA.A.AB.BA/imbû tâmtim with nine,¹¹²⁰ ŠEM^{LI}/burāšu and ŪḪAR.ḪAR/*ḥašû*¹¹²¹ with eight,¹¹²² ŠEM^{GUR}.GUR/*kukru*¹¹²³ and GĪŠUL.Ḫ/qān šalālī with seven,¹¹²⁴ and ŠEM-^dMAŠ/nikiptu with six.¹¹²⁵

GĪŠERIN/erēnu-cedar or its oil or resin features in twelve ghost prescriptions for ringing, roaring or hurting ears.¹¹²⁶ Similarly, ŠEM^{ŠEŠ}/murru,¹¹²⁷ ŠEM^{BAL} or ŠEM^{MUG}/bal-lukku,¹¹²⁸ GAZI^{SAR}/kasû,¹¹²⁹ ŠEM^{LI}/burāšu,¹¹³⁰ ŠEM-^dMAŠ/nikiptu,¹¹³¹ GĪ.DÙG.GA/qānu ṭābu,¹¹³² and ŠEM^{GUR}.GUR/*kukru*¹¹³³ are each used for between six and ten prescriptions for ghost problems in the ears. NA⁴*mūšu* appears in five¹¹³⁴ separate prescriptions for ghostly eye problems. GĪŠERIN/erēnu-cedar wins the prize for most often employed to treat ghost-induced persistent bodyaches with thirteen,¹¹³⁵ followed by KA.A.AB.BA/imbû tâmtim with twelve,¹¹³⁶ GĪŠ^{DĪḪ}/baltu or GĪŠ.Ū^{GIR}/ašāgu with seven,¹¹³⁷ and Ū^{KUR}.KUR/atāʾišu with six¹¹³⁸ references. Most heavily utilized for internal problems laid at the door of ghosts are ŠEM^{LI}/burāšu, ŠEM^{GUR}.GUR/kukru, Ū^{NU}.LUḪ.ḪA/nuḥur-tu, Ū^{URN}û, Ū^{KUR}.KUR/atāʾišu, IM^{SAḪAR}.NA⁴.KUR.RA/aban gabī, ŪḪAR.ḪAR/ḥašû, NUMUN. GĪŠ^{SINIG}/zēr bīni, and Ū^{imḥur}-lim (et alia)¹¹³⁹ which appear in six,¹¹⁴⁰ seven,¹¹⁴¹ nine,¹¹⁴² ten,¹¹⁴³ thirteen,¹¹⁴⁴ fourteen,¹¹⁴⁵ seventeen,¹¹⁴⁶ eighteen,¹¹⁴⁷ and twenty-three¹¹⁴⁸ prescriptions, respectively.

Not only are these patterns apparent from the ghost prescriptions themselves, but they also hold when ghost prescriptions are compared with other medical texts. Without a complete transliteration of all of these texts, hard figures for the numbers of prescriptions containing any one ingredient are impossible to obtain; however, even a preliminary survey yields impressive results. Thus, for example, Ū^{AB}.DUḪ/kamantu is once used for ghost headache¹¹⁴⁹ but also appears in six prescriptions for ordinary headache.¹¹⁵⁰ Similarly, ŠEM^{BULUḪ}/baluḥḥu and ŠEM-^dMAŠ/nikiptu are found in eleven¹¹⁵¹ and nine¹¹⁵² headache prescriptions in addition to one¹¹⁵³ and six¹¹⁵⁴ attestations for ghost headache. GAZI^{SAR}/kasû is once used in a ghost prescription for eye problems¹¹⁵⁵ but appears also in eight other remedies for sore or “pressed” eyes or troubled vision.¹¹⁵⁶ Similarly, NUMUN. GĪŠ^{SINIG}/zēr bīni features in three¹¹⁵⁷ ghostly and four¹¹⁵⁸ apparently non-ghostly eye prescriptions. GĪŠERIN/erēnu-cedar or its oil or resin features, in addition to the twelve ghost prescriptions for roaring or hurting ears,¹¹⁵⁹ also in seven¹¹⁶⁰ others. Similarly, A.MEŠ. GĪŠ^{NU}.ŪR.MA/mê nurmî (pomegranate juice) is once used to treat ghost-induced roaring in the ears¹¹⁶¹ but also appears in four other prescriptions for inflammation, “heaviness”, suppuration, and bleeding from the ears.¹¹⁶² Sīḥu, argānu and barīrātu are not only used to treat bodyaches brought on by hand of ghost¹¹⁶³ but also feature in thirteen apparently non-ghostly prescriptions for sick hips, painful shins, stiff ankles, or hurting feet.¹¹⁶⁴ Similarly, ŠEM^{GUR}.GUR/kukru and/or ŠEM^{LI}/burāšu in addition to four prescriptions for ghostly sick hips(?) or stiff heels¹¹⁶⁵ appear in fifteen for hips, stiff ankles, and stiff Achilles tendons.¹¹⁶⁶ GĪŠ^{DĪḪ}/baltu and/or GĪŠ.Ū^{GIR}/ašāgu features in several ghost amulets for numbness,¹¹⁶⁷ but is also used in a further ten bandages, salves or potions¹¹⁶⁸ for numbness or paralysis due to stroke. Similarly, GĪŠERIN/*erēnu*¹¹⁶⁹ and GĪŠ^{SINIG}/*bīnu*¹¹⁷⁰ appear in six¹¹⁷¹ and nine¹¹⁷² non-ghostly numbness or paralysis prescriptions, respectively, in addition to their use for “hand of ghost.” ŠEM^{GUR}.GUR/kukru and/or ŠEM^{LI}/burāšu is used to treat ghost-induced “shortness of breath”¹¹⁷³ but also appears in twelve¹¹⁷⁴ other prescriptions for lung conditions and various types of cough and four emetic preparations.¹¹⁷⁵ Similarly, \dot{U} EME UR.GI-7/lišān kalbi, \dot{S} EM \dot{S} ĒŠ/murru, and \dot{U} Ḫ.ḏID/ru' tītu, in addition to their use for ghost-induced “shortness of breath” appear in five,¹¹⁷⁶ four,¹¹⁷⁷ and two non-ghost lung prescriptions, respectively.¹¹⁷⁸

What is more, even with only a fraction of the medical texts analyzed, similar patterns are apparent in conditions not ostensibly connected with ghosts.¹¹⁷⁹ Thus, \dot{S} EM GÚR.GÚR/kukru and/or \dot{S} EM LI/burāšu appear in no less than twenty-nine¹¹⁸⁰ prescriptions for fever or ṣētu, ZAG.Ḫ.LI^{SAR}/saḫlû in twelve,¹¹⁸¹ A GAZI^{SAR} in eleven,¹¹⁸² \dot{U} aprušu in seven,¹¹⁸³ and \dot{U} elikulla in six.¹¹⁸⁴ The triad of sīḫu, argānu and/or barīrātu appear in eight prescriptions for numbness or paralysis, aphasia, stroke or seizures,¹¹⁸⁵ and GI.ŠUL.ḪI/qān šalāli in twelve,¹¹⁸⁶ while ZAG.Ḫ.LI^{SAR}/*saḫlû*¹¹⁸⁷ and \dot{S} EM GÚR.GÚR/kukru and/or \dot{S} EM LI/burāšu take the crown at fifteen.¹¹⁸⁸ For cough or lung conditions, \dot{S} EM BAL/ \dot{S} EM MUG/ballukku is most ubiquitous at eleven uses,¹¹⁸⁹ with GI.DÙG.GA/qanû tābu at ten,¹¹⁹⁰ LĀL/dišpu at nine,¹¹⁹¹ ZAG.Ḫ.LI^{SAR}/saḫlû and \dot{U} ḪAR.ḪAR/*ḥašû*¹¹⁹² appearing in seven,¹¹⁹³ and GI^Š ŠE.NĀ.A/šunû in five.¹¹⁹⁴ LĀL/dišpu appears most frequently in laxative preparations, with ten attestations¹¹⁹⁵ in all. For urinary tract problems, \dot{S} EM \dot{S} ĒŠ/murru is most ubiquitous, with no less than thirty-three¹¹⁹⁶ uses, followed by \dot{U} EME UR.GI-7/lišān kalbi with twenty-seven,¹¹⁹⁷ \dot{U} imḫur-lim with sixteen,¹¹⁹⁸ \dot{U} nušābu with twelve,¹¹⁹⁹ GI^Š LAGAB/puquṭtu,¹²⁰⁰ \dot{U} GEŠTIN.KA₅.A/karān šēlibi,¹²⁰¹ and IM SAḪAR.NA₄.KUR.RA/*aban gabi*¹²⁰² with eleven, \dot{U} BABBAR with ten,¹²⁰³ GI^Š. \dot{U} GÍR.LAGAB/dadānu with nine,¹²⁰⁴ and \dot{S} EM LI/burāšu with eight.¹²⁰⁵ \dot{U} ankinūte appears in five prescriptions¹²⁰⁶ for AN.TA.ŠUB.BA, and the like. Milk or ghee feature in no less than twenty-two prescriptions¹²⁰⁷ for various sorts of eye problems. This is almost matched by ZAG.Ḫ.LI^{SAR}/saḫlû with sixteen,¹²⁰⁸ followed by \dot{U} KUR.RA/ninû with five¹²⁰⁹ and GI^Š ERIN/erēnu-cedar with four.¹²¹⁰ \dot{S} EM IM.(MAN).DI/ \dot{S} EM MAN.DU/*suādu*¹²¹¹ appears in twelve prescriptions for stiff hips, sore shins, stiff ankles or feet, sagallu, maškādu, or šaššatu, followed by GI^Š ŠINIG/bīnu with ten,¹²¹² GI^Š *šūšu*¹²¹³ and MUNU₄/buqlu each with nine.¹²¹⁴ A GAZI^{SAR} with seven,¹²¹⁵ and \dot{U} azallû with six.¹²¹⁶ A GAZI^{SAR} features in sixteen¹²¹⁷ prescriptions for ringworm and other skin conditions, followed by \dot{S} EM GÚR.GÚR/kukru and/or \dot{S} EM LI/burāšu with ten.¹²¹⁸ Last but by no means least, \dot{U} azallû is to be found in seven prescriptions¹²¹⁹ for impotence or spermatorrhea.

The striking consistency in the usages suggest that it would theoretically be possible to determine which of the plants employed by ancient Mesopotamian āšipu's were anthelmintics, astringents, antispasmodics, carminatives, emmenagogues, febrifuges, etc. from a study of the medical uses alone, even in ignorance of the actual identification of the plants. When a number of prescriptions for the same problem appear in sequence, one not infrequently has the impression that one is seeing the same ingredients over and over again, with the odd plant being added to or subtracted from the mix. It is, for example, hard not to notice how many of the ancient Mesopotamian treatments for eye problems contain some combination of emesallim-salt, U₅ ARGAB^{MUŠEN}, \dot{S} EM \dot{S} ĒŠ/murru, “fat” of kanaktu-aromatic, and \dot{U} .BABBAR, either alone or with other ingredients.¹²²⁰

Moreover, as already noticed by Herrero, certain plants (viz kukru and burāšu, sīḫu, argānu and barīrātu and tarmuš, imḫur-lim, and imḫur-ešra) appear together in prescriptions with sufficient regularity to suggest the possibility of synergy.¹²²¹ Of forty-one ghost prescriptions containing tarmuš, only four did not also contain imḫur-

lim and/or imhur-ešra;¹²²² similarly, all but twenty-one of fifty-three ghost prescriptions in which either kukru or burāšu was used contained both ingredients;¹²²³ and all but two of eleven with sīhu also contained argānu and barīrātu.¹²²⁴ Not mentioned by Herrero, and somewhat less frequently attested, is another common pair: ^{GIŠ}DÌH/baltu and ^{GIŠ}ÚGIR/ašāgu which appear together in all but thirteen out of twenty-nine ghost prescriptions in which one or both of them appears.¹²²⁵

Also remarkable about ancient Mesopotamian medical texts is the fact that there was no more “superstition” about drugs being good for only one symptom than there was about drugs being only good for “hand” of ghost, or, to put it another way, it is clear that the āšipu had at least an empirical awareness of what we would term the actions of drugs. Thus, for example, ^Ú*aktam/atkam* features in six prescriptions for cough or lung congestions,¹²²⁶ but is also used in seven emetic preparations for internal problems,¹²²⁷ uses consistent with an expectorant. Similarly, ^{SEM}BULUH/baluḥḥu is to be found in seven prescriptions for teeth problems or excess salivation,¹²²⁸ two for pus flowing from the ears,¹²²⁹ six for various skin problems,¹²³⁰ and six for rectal bleeding,¹²³¹ uses which suggest some sort of astringent. Most remarkable, however is the fact that ^{SEM}LI/burāšu appears in six prescriptions for stiff hips,¹²³² and eleven for urinary tract problems,¹²³³ usages consistent with a medicament regulating the amount of uric acid in the system.

What all of this suggests is that the usage of medicaments for “hand of ghost” was in no way dictated by the āšipu’s theories on the nature of ghosts and what might have induced them to attack the patient, a conclusion which might have been suggested already from the fact that the therapeutic medical texts published in AMT and BAM often do not bother to mention the ghost, demon or god who was supposed to be causing the observed symptoms.¹²³⁴ As for what the principle was which determined whether an individual ingredient should be used in a particular prescription or not, the only obvious suggestion is several millennia of experimentation, a process which is hinted at in the occasional mention that a particular remedy has been “tested”.¹²³⁵ Corroborative evidence for such testing may readily be found in the statements on a number of ghost prescriptions that the remedy will take a specified number of days to work.¹²³⁶ My personal favorite is however, the note at the end of a prescription for “sick gall bladder”: “If (the medicine) affects him badly and he becomes (even more) ill, do not worry, he will get well (in the end).”¹²³⁷

In short, even a preliminary analysis of the medicaments confirms what we have already begun to suspect, namely that the variety of ills which ghosts were capable of producing also generated a variety of treatments for “hand” of ghosts, ranging from elaborate propitiatory rituals accompanied by offerings and prayers to the most mundane of bandages containing ingredients which had been shown by a long process of trial and error to provide effective relief.

Chapter 7

CONCLUSION

“Sin” or “Sanction”

An interesting question raised by the texts which we have been analyzing is the extent to which it is really true, as is often asserted that “The Mesopotamians believed that disease was a punishment inflicted by the gods upon men for their sins . . . illness was therefore essentially an ethical defect, a black mark, a condemnation which rendered man morally unclean as well as physically unhealthy”,¹²³⁸ in short, that for ancient Mesopotamians, illness was a “sanction” which followed inevitably in the trail of “sin”. There are a number of problems with this assertion. In the first place, there is no ancient Mesopotamian equivalent to the Christian concept of “sin” in the full theological sense (as an offense committed against the one monotheistic God), and I am not simply splitting hairs over the fact that ancient Mesopotamians revered a plurality of gods, some of whom were female. It is not that ancient Mesopotamians did not feel guilt when they did something which they knew to be wrong or that ancient Mesopotamian gods did not become enraged at moral offenses and bring down their wrath on the heads of oath breakers and other miscreants. The point is that, quite apart from the fact that polytheistic gods are perfectly capable of becoming angry for no particularly good reason, many of what we would consider moral offenses in ancient Mesopotamia were not (in the first instance at least) offenses against the gods. Not only was it possible to commit a “sin” (arnu) against a fellow human being, but there were classes of spirits other than gods, of which ghosts are the most obvious category, with whom mankind had an ongoing relationship, characterized by certain benefits and accompanied by certain duties, failure to perform which constituted a “sin” against the offended spirit.

Offenses against the gods, properly speaking, consisted of things like eating the wrong food on the god’s day or coming into the temple without washing after sexual intercourse. Offenses against man or ghost might be handled by appealing to the gods to punish the miscreant, but the offended party was also free to curse or to haunt him, respectively (with the understanding that the cursee or hauntee could appeal to Šamaš for justice if he felt that the punishment was undeserved). When the gods were angry at someone, they frequently displayed their anger by withdrawing their protection or even by sending ghosts and demons as their intermediaries; it does not necessarily follow, however, that the offense which brought on the punishment in question was, properly speaking, an offense against the gods. On the contrary, it was the failure to bury the dead and/or to provide funerary offerings for them which typically brought down on the heads of unfilial descendants the wrath of the outraged family ghost.

Moreover, it is only too clear that many, if not most, of the afflicting ghosts had, in fact, only the slimmest of legitimate reasons for attacking their now quite ill victim, viz that nobody was providing them their needs. A family ghost who was not being taken care of had every reason to be angry with his relatives, and they could hardly complain if he gave them a migraine, but what about these “ghosts with nobody to care for them” that figure so prominently in enumerations of possible trouble causers? What right had they to accost some total stranger who had simply blundered into their path?

The keen sense of the injustice of this situation shines through the often stiff prose of ancient Mesopotamian ghost prescription recitations.

“I do not go to Kutha, assembling-place of ghosts; why do you keep coming after me?!”¹²³⁹

“You decide the case of the wronged man and woman; you make their decisions go aright. I am NN, son of NN; I kneel in exhaustion. . . . Šamaš, you are the judge and I have brought you my life. I kneel for judgment of the case concerning the sickness which has seized me”.¹²⁴⁰

“I am truly grieved, confused and troubled. <I kneel?> for your judgment; save me so that I may not be wronged!”¹²⁴¹

The offering of donkey urine¹²⁴² to “the ghost of my father or mother, or the ghost of my brother or sister”¹²⁴³ in one of the ghost apparition prescriptions also suggests that, in some cases at least, even family ghosts might be expected to act in a greedy and unfamilial manner, demanding offerings above and beyond those to which they were legitimately entitled. It is no accident that it was the god of justice who was the protector of ghosts and that, although in general, treatment of ghost figurines was restrained in recognition of the ghosts’ general right to offerings and the painful straits to which they may have been reduced by their absence, one still finds examples of twisting arms, scratching or other minor maltreatment of ghost surrogates.¹²⁴⁴

Last, but by no means least, there was the distinct possibility that a ghost might have been sent to torment a particular victim because that person had gotten in the way of an evil sorcerer who was simply using the ghost as a demonic agent. In this last case, no blame of any kind could possibly be attached to the victim for the fact that he was now experiencing illness. We must remember that the notion that sorcerers do their evil with the “permission of God” is purely and definitionally Christian. Much has been made of the presence of Šurpu and such literary compositions as “The Righteous Sufferer” (Ludlul bēl nēmeqi) in the interests of proving an ancient Mesopotamian obsession with “sin”.¹²⁴⁵ Yet if one wished instead to use Maqlû and related texts as a model, one might just as easily be able to persuade oneself that, like Evans Pritchard’s Azande, ancient Mesopotamians blamed every conceivable illness and misfortune on the machinations of witches and sorcerers.

In short, for the ancient Mesopotamian, illness and misfortune could result from a wide variety of possible causes, many of which were not “sins” (at least not in the Christian sense) and for only some of which the patient could be held personally responsible. It was only later, with the elimination of other possible causes of misfortune by the application of a strict monotheistic principle, that the possibility could arise of automatically blaming the victim for any misfortune which might conceivably befall him.¹²⁴⁶ Only then, did all illness become a “sanction” for “sin.”

“Divination” or “Diagnosis”?

Conventionally, the diagnostic and prognostic series (TDP) is dismissed as a mere “divinatory treatise”,¹²⁴⁷ usually on the grounds that the diagnoses are formatted as “omens”: “If the patient has such and such symptoms, it is such and such a disease; the patient will die/get well”.¹²⁴⁸ If formatting as omens makes a divinatory treatise, however, TDP was not a divinatory treatise, with the exception of the first two tablets, which contain all of the sightings of serpents mating and other chance occurrences which are supposed to prognosticate good or ill for the āšipu’s patients and which, it has been argued, originally formed a separate entity.¹²⁴⁹ This may readily be seen by a comparison of the verbs in tablets one and two with those in the rest of the series, which contain all of the diagnoses and prognoses which are based on the actual observation of the patient. Whereas the former, where written out, invariably appear in the preterite, the latter are, where written out, either stative or present tense, except under the conditions laid out by Herrero for the therapeutic AMT and BAM texts, a fact which led him to postulate a separate “medical” tradition for the latter.¹²⁵⁰

What is more, a propensity for phrasing diagnoses in quasi-omenological form is by no means peculiar to the ancient Mesopotamians. I point out the following, drawn from a recent book on neurology: “If an infant has a characteristic kittenlike cry, that baby has crie-du-chat syndrome.”¹²⁵¹ Even more interesting from this point of view are the following comments drawn from a modern medical text book. “Coma in elderly patients after 2 weeks of illness presages death.”¹²⁵² “A sudden increase in the number of cotton-wool spots represents an ominous prognostic sign and may herald the appearance of rapidly advancing retinopathy.”¹²⁵³ If this were the āšipu speaking, the explicit invocation of omenological language would certainly have engendered grave doubts as to the possibility that the statements in question could be factually true. In short, TDP is a diagnostic and prognostic handbook intended for the training and use of the ancient Mesopotamian equivalent of our “physician”, the āšipu,¹²⁵⁴ and not, the first two tablets excepted, a “divinatory treatise”.

“Natural” Causes

An interesting question raised by the presence of diagnoses of the type “hand” of ghost, etc. is the extent to which ancient Mesopotamians attributed medical problems to “natural” as opposed to “supernatural” causes. Those looking for “natural” causes in ancient Mesopotamian texts would have no difficulty in locating examples of prescriptions where no ghost, god, or sorcerer appears. The fact that what we would consider a spirit is not mentioned in a particular context is, however, no proof that what we would define as “natural” causes were thought to be at work. Jaundice may sound “natural” to us, but it was thought of by the ancient Mesopotamians as a demon.¹²⁵⁵

Moreover, we would naturally expect categories of illness brought on by what we would define as “natural” causes to be dealt with by means of “rational” treatments such as bandages, salves or potions and, conversely, we would expect categories of illness brought on by what we would define as “supernatural” causes to be dealt with by “magical” treatments such as figurines or libations. In fact, examples of violations of this principle may be found in both directions. Not only are there any number of fully “rational” treatments for such “supernatural” causes as “hand of ghost”, “curses” and sorcery, but there are also purely “magical” treatments for “natural” problems. Take, for example, one of the treatments listed in the medical corpus for “high fever” which involves manipulating a clay figurine.¹²⁵⁶

What is more, from a preliminary survey of the medical texts, it appears that “hand of ghost” is unusual (as compared with “hand of god”, “hand of Marduk”, “hand of Ištar”, etc.) in being explicitly mentioned with some regularity in the medical prescriptions, as opposed to in the diagnostic series alone,¹²⁵⁷ and yet, if it were not for the diagnostic series, one would hardly have supposed that many of the prescriptions for headache with bloodshot or teary eyes or roaring in the ears¹²⁵⁸ which we have treated here had anything to do with ghosts. Nor was it unheard of for recitations which would seem to impute the patient’s suffering to such things as stiff muscles or obstructions in the ear canal¹²⁵⁹ to be attached to prescriptions which explicitly implicate a ghost as the ultimate cause.¹²⁶⁰ In short, behind many of the ostensibly “natural” causes appearing in the therapeutic texts in AMT and BAM, there lurks a ghostly (or demonic or godly or sorcerous) “hand”.¹²⁶¹

This is not to say that ancient Mesopotamians did not realize that it was possible for a person’s body to malfunction “on its own”, as it were; on the contrary, they blamed some women’s inability to give birth, correctly, on an overly narrow birth canal,¹²⁶² correctly recognized the connection between fever and teething pains,¹²⁶³ and were by no means adverse to attributing the most diverse and occasionally bizarre symptoms to such ostensibly “natural” causes as “sick gall bladder” or constriction of the urethra.¹²⁶⁴ There are also any number of prescriptions for simple headaches, skin problems, fever, burning feet, aching muscles, sick lungs, kidney stones, illness of the spleen, etc. There was even some learned speculation that such provably demonic complaints as “hand of god”, “hand of goddess” and “hand of ghost” might actually be caused by the malfunctioning of internal organs such as the heart or stomach.¹²⁶⁵ That this is a reflection of a separate school of medicine based on “natural” causes, however, is readily disproved by the colophon, which indicates the tablet in question to be the work of the āšipu,¹²⁶⁶ a healing specialist usually characterized in the literature as an “exorcist”, “conjurer”, or “magician”¹²⁶⁷ due primarily to his tendency to attribute disease to “supernatural” causes.

Nor is there any contradiction in such speculations. It does not require any great leap of the imagination to realize that organs with a sufficient independence of mind (so to speak) to malfunction readily come to be viewed, not as inanimate matter in the mechanistic sense, but as a lower order of spirit. It is, therefore, hardly surprising that, in the ancient Mesopotamian medical corpus in general, those recitations directed against such ostensibly “natural” conditions as headache or sagallu quite often look purely, even definitionally, “magical”. Particularly noteworthy in this regard is their tendency to what is usually termed vox magica (“Subarean”, barely comprehensible Sumerian and “nonsense” syllables),¹²⁶⁸ their frequent inclusion of historiolae (ranging from the boringly formulaic Marduk-Ea type to the wonderfully original toothache-worm cosmology)¹²⁶⁹ and their lengthy invocation of magical analogies.¹²⁷⁰

Like their more obviously demonic fellow trouble-causers, malfunctioning body parts might be sparked by other spirits but they could also, theoretically at least, misbehave on their own. For example, a person could have his head “seize” him or a ghost could cause his head to “seize” him or an angry god could cause the ghost to cause his head to “seize” him, or a sorcerer could get the god angry so that he caused the ghost, etc.

Conclusion

Ironically, it does not follow that ancient Mesopotamians attributed diseases to “supernatural” causes. Although ancient Mesopotamian gods made the rules of nature (the ME’s), once these rules had been made, even the gods became subject to them. They ate, bathed, got dressed, laughed and wept, awoke and slept, fell in and out of love, engaged in sexual intercourse and begot children, fought battles, went on strike, and even got killed. It follows that ancient Mesopotamian gods, like their ancient Greek counterparts before philosophy redefined them, were in no significant way beyond or outside of nature.

If, therefore, ancient Mesopotamian gods, ghosts and spirits are not “natural” causes in any sense a modern scientist would recognize, neither are they “supernatural” in any sense a modern theologian would recognize; indeed it has long been argued that a characteristic feature of polytheistic religious traditions in general is precisely the “failure” to recognize a category of supernatural.¹²⁷¹ If, then, it can be argued that things like migraine-inducing ghosts are “supernatural” causes of disease simply because they do not fit our category of “natural”, it should also be equally valid to argue that they are “natural” simply because they do not fit our category of “supernatural”. At the very least, it should follow that it is not immediately obvious where they should go in our classification system.

It should, therefore come as no surprise that the presence of “supernatural” causes by no means prevented the āšipu from correctly grouping the various symptoms produced by what we now recognize as typhoid and blaming them on a single cause, namely the demoness Lamaštu.¹²⁷² What is more, there is reason to suppose that, in making this diagnosis, the ancient Mesopotamian āšipu tailored his understanding of the demoness to fit what he observed to be happening to his patients, and not the other way round. “As for why Lamaštu was specifically associated with typhoid fever and the jaundice which accompanies it, Wiggermann¹²⁷³ makes the interesting, and quite plausible, suggestion that it is due to a series of word associations which made Lamaštu the (frustrated) mother (ummu) and (rejected) daughter (martu) of Anu responsible for illnesses involving fever (ummu) and bile (martu).”¹²⁷⁴ It is thus hardly surprising to find fevers which are not associated with biliary infection, or which do not particularly victimize pregnant women and young children being blamed on other causes, such as the “li’bu of the mountain.”¹²⁷⁵

Similarly, there were several types of jaundice, one of which was specifically associated with the gall bladder¹²⁷⁶ and another with the liver (aḥḥāzu),¹²⁷⁷ while a third involved not only the jaundice itself, but also wasting (amurriqānu).¹²⁷⁸ It is also suggestive, in view of the fact that modern medicine recognizes at least three distinct types of epilepsy, that the āšipu divided falling spells into several different syndromes (AN.TA.ŠUB.BA, LUGAL.ÛR.RA, LUGAL.AMAŠ.PA.È etc.).¹²⁷⁹

One of the fruits of our researches into ancient medicine is that it is now clear that many of the apparently disparate symptoms attributed by the āšipu to various trouble causers, including ghosts, are, in fact related. For example, the āšipu was not entirely mistaken in attributing what appear from the descriptions to be meningitis¹²⁸⁰ and otitis media¹²⁸¹ to “hand” of ghost. These can indeed be attributed to the same cause, not, admittedly, ghosts, but other assailants equally invisible to the patient, namely bacteria such as Haemophilus influenzae. Similarly, the āšipu was not in error when he associated flashes of light in the eyes¹²⁸² with severe headache,¹²⁸³ or when he took care to distinguish between treatable headaches which lasted “from sunrise to sunset”,¹²⁸⁴ and potentially fatal headaches lasting “from sunset to the morning watch”.¹²⁸⁵ The apparent references to delirium tremens¹²⁸⁶ might have been laid at the door of ghosts due to the tendency of alcoholics to hallucination. Similarly, the suspicion that “hand” of ghost was at work in serious cases of *ṣētu*¹²⁸⁷ may well be due to the fact that diseases which, like ṣētu, are characterized by high fever and frontal headache,¹²⁸⁸ may also be accompanied, in the acute phase, by ringing in the ears, a symptom more obviously caused by a ghost since, as we have seen, ghosts were in the habit of entering people through their ears.¹²⁸⁹ In short, the idea that “natural” causes (as we define them) are the hallmark of a medical as opposed to a “magical” approach to illness needs seriously to be reexamined.

‘Medicine’ or ‘Magic’

When we ask whether the āšipu was a “doctor” or a “magician” what we really want to know is how much of this healing tradition was “medicine” and how much mere quackery. If by quackery you mean the substitution of remedies which are of limited or no effectiveness for remedies which are effective, then very little of what the ancient Mesopotamian “magician” practiced was quackery. To say that a ghost was ultimately responsible for any of the conditions blamed on “hand of ghost” was not to exclude the possibility of “rational” treatment¹²⁹⁰ but quite simply to identify which set of apotropaic rituals was appropriate in order to help the medicine along or to be applied if the medicine seemed not to be doing its job and/or to determine which “special ingredients” (as, for example, dust from a tomb or acacia specifically collected from that location) should be added to the mix for maximal effectiveness.

The presence of completely separate “magical” and “medical” treatments for the same condition, roaring in the ears,¹²⁹¹ warns us that we should never assume that simply because we have only a “magical” treatment in front of us, that the actual patient for whom this was designed was not also simultaneously receiving some form of “medicine”. This tendency to say “and, and” rather than “either, or” when it comes to “magic” and “medicine” is also typical of European folk magico-medical traditions.¹²⁹²

If the āšipu had really been a quack, the largest proportion of “hocus pocus” should logically have been found in those cases which are listed in the diagnostic series, TDP, as hopeless. Indeed, Golz assumes that the ancient Mesopotamians, like “primitive” peoples generally (sic), attributed trifling ailments to “natural causes” but that difficult ailments, and particularly those which were lengthy or incurable, demanded an “irrational” explanation which would naturally have brought into play the “entire exorcistic apparatus of the temple”, at least if the patient were of a high enough social status.¹²⁹³

On the contrary, as a careful examination of the medical texts reveals, the prognosis “he will die” was usually the mark of a set of symptoms for which no treatment was to be offered.¹²⁹⁴ That is to say, matches may usually be found in therapeutic prescriptions for those sets of symptoms which appear in TDP as curable conditions,¹²⁹⁵ whereas those labelled in TDP as incurable ("he will die") are rarely quoted in the therapeutic texts and, when they are, they typically appear in a separate section with no prescription attached.¹²⁹⁶

Only in cases where treatment was unsure but remission was possible was what we would deem "magic" or "managed placebo effect" brought into play. Ironically, it is precisely this refusal to treat hopeless cases (the hallmark of the doctor as opposed to the quack) which has caused the āšipu to be branded as a "magician".¹²⁹⁷ This is, in part, due to the absence of a canonical order for the therapeutic texts,¹²⁹⁸ which has obscured the intimate relationship between the diagnostic series, incontestably meant for āšipu's to use when treating patients, and the rest of the medical texts in the corpus.¹²⁹⁹

Empirical medicine employs treatments because they have been observed to work (whether the medicine in question was discovered by accident or by simple trial and error or in the process of testing a theory). It would, then, be possible to define quackery as the employment of particular treatments because some theory or philosophy or religious belief says they ought to work (whether they actually produce the desired result or not).¹³⁰⁰ By this measure also, the ancient Mesopotamian "magician" was a doctor, not a quack.

That the "magical" understanding of illness is by no means incompatible with a fully empirical approach to medicaments is quite readily demonstrable in the case of "hand of ghost" prescriptions. If theory had determined treatment, one would expect to find a limited repertoire of plants, bones and stones, all with more or less obvious connections with death, ghosts, or the Netherworld, being applied uniformly to all cases diagnosed as "hand of ghost" and, conversely, we would expect plants used for this syndrome not to be used to treat symptoms which were not caused by ghosts. Neither is the case.

Although the odd ingredient does seem to have been suggested by a ghostly context, what is remarkable in "hand of ghost" texts is how infrequently this occurs. As we have seen,¹³⁰¹ some 251 stones, plants, mineral and animal substances were used by ancient Mesopotamians to treat "hand of ghost" alone, corresponding indeed to a wide variety of possible symptoms of ghost seizure which, as we have also seen,¹³⁰² range from vascular headaches with or without roaring in the ears to muscular pains and/or neurological disorders to annoyingly persistent flatulence.

What is more, ancient Mesopotamian healers used specific drugs for specific sets of symptoms. Even the sets of symptoms for which drugs were used seems to have been suggested by experiment; how else can one account for the fact that ingredients which were used for, say, ghost sideaches, were also used for non-ghost aches and pains and might also be used for symptoms, such as urinary tract disorders, which seem never to have been blamed on ghosts?¹³⁰³

In some cases, one can prove or guess some "magical" reason for the application of a specific stone, plant, etc. However, in the majority of cases the "magical" reason, if there was one, is anything but obvious. Indeed, the distinct preference of the therapeutic texts for wheat flour over šigūšu-flour in treating "hand" of ghost flies in the face of what little we do know about ancient Mesopotamian demonological theory. The latter grain is ikkibu ("special") for ghosts, the former for gods,¹³⁰⁴ and hence theoretically wheat flour should have been used exclusively for "hand" of god, and šigūšu-flour for "hand" of ghost.¹³⁰⁵ The expected encoding is evident in offerings of bread or flour to gods and ghosts in ghost prescriptions (where šigūšu-flour is indeed used for ghosts and wheat flour for gods),¹³⁰⁶ but not with treatments for physical problems which are attributed to ghosts. There, the deciding factor as to which flour to use seems to have been not theory but trial and error on actual patients.

Nor is there any trace of “higher theory” in the ancient Mesopotamian pharmacological handbooks (Šammu šikinšu, etc.) some of which, at least, were included among the text series which the āšipu was expected to master.¹³⁰⁷ Had theory determined treatment, one might have expected an ordering of plants by, or at least a notation of their classification into, “hot, cold, wet and dry” or if not the four humors, why not one of the other schemata commonly found in other ancient Mesopotamian texts: “north, south, east or west”; “red, white, green or black”, or “right, left, above, below”? On the contrary, what appears is an ordering and classification of drugs by the symptoms which they were believed to allay and by the method used to prepare them.

If his approach was essentially empirical, then the fact that the āšipu attributed diseases to “supernatural” causes can hardly be taken as “proof” that the symptoms which he described so carefully refer exclusively to psychosomatic illnesses.¹³⁰⁸ Neither is it the case, that because ancient Mesopotamian healing specialists were not philosophers, there was no merit in ancient Mesopotamian medicines. There is no longer any excuse for dismissing “traditional” medicine as the purest nonsense, definitionally devoid of any actual medical value.¹³⁰⁹ Many of our most useful modern medicines were not created out of whole cloth by some “mad scientist” let loose in a lab but instead were synthesized from medicinal plants already in use.¹³¹⁰

Finally, there is no reason to assert that: “Most herbal remedies were probably pharmacologically ineffective and their benefits limited to the ‘placebo effect’ which relieved a patient’s anxiety. Without being able to know the true etiology of specific diseases, a physician would have been powerless to more than treat the overt symptoms.”¹³¹¹ Plants will work even if the physician does not understand exactly why they work (aspirin being a salient case in point), and the fact that one is dealing with a “folk” medicine by no means excludes it from being a specific remedy (as opposed to a “mere” treatment of the symptoms, as if treating symptoms was not really medicine[!]).¹³¹²

Unfortunately, attempts to separate the gold from the dross too often run aground on the rock of inadequate medical knowledge on the part of those not trained as physicians. Transdermal medication¹³¹³ is perhaps too recent a development in modern medicine for cuneiformists to be expected to realize that salves designed to treat some internal problem could potentially “really work” and, although any smoker should realize this, it is not generally appreciated by laymen that inhalation (fumigation)¹³¹⁴ is the most effective delivery system for medicaments short of injection. Our ignorance is not, however, a reasonable excuse for dismissing ancient Mesopotamian medicine as little better than quackery.¹³¹⁵

What makes modern medicine a science is not the absence of “magic” or the presence of theories of natural causation, but the subservience of theory to the observed benefits which its application brings to actual patients. In the absence of such subservience, the theorizing of intellectuals, whether it be about child-snatching demons¹³¹⁶ or wandering uteruses, ceases to be merely ridiculous and becomes an active source of misdiagnosis and of “treatments” which do not help and might even actively harm the hapless patient who submits himself to them.

Conclusion

It is well known to any student of ancient science that Hippocratic physicians were anti-empiricists, that is to say, they considered themselves, and were considered by others, to be philosophers.¹³¹⁷ It is also known, but too often ignored, that they also allowed their often wild theories to dictate inappropriate and sometimes dangerous remedies as, for example, using an anti-coagulant to “stop” bleeding¹³¹⁸ or cauterizing the armpits of athletes with dislocated shoulders after using a device similar to the torture rack to get the bones back into place¹³¹⁹ or deliberately giving a patient acute pneumothorax to “treat” a pleural infection¹³²⁰ or using a bow drill to give a patient with a bruised bone a skull fracture(!).¹³²¹ Add to this the fact that it was Hippocratic practice to routinely bleed and purge their patients before confining them to a starvation diet,¹³²² and it should come as no surprise that it has been estimated that the Hippocratic iatros had no better than a 50/50 chance of not making the patient worse than he was before he was “treated”.¹³²³

The worst that the āšipu can be accused of is that he performed a lot of what we might characterize as “hocus-pocus” alongside what appear to be perfectly reasonable, and in some cases quite sophisticated, potions, ointments, and bandages.¹³²⁴ To try to separate this “hocus pocus” from the “real medicine” is, however, a rather difficult and ultimately pointless exercise. The fact that a particular drug, when tested carefully so as to avoid confusing “actual benefits” with mere “placebo effect”, can be observed to relieve a particular symptom is, for us, the only acceptable evidence of medical value. To someone less committed to a universe confined to “natural” causes, the fact that a particular drug is observed to work is evidence enough of its value, and the observation that it works better when used on odd numbered Tuesdays or when mixed up into a green and disagreeable liquid is not proof that it does not “really” work but on the contrary that it should only be used on odd numbered Tuesdays or in green slimy liquid form.

It is to be kept in mind that there is no ancient Mesopotamian analogue to what modern intellectuals see as the essential incompatibility between “irrational magic” and “rational science”. This is not to say that ancient Mesopotamians were incapable of rationality, but on the contrary that there was nothing irrational about ancient Mesopotamian magic. There is no inherent conflict between the ancient Mesopotamian belief that malevolent spirits are causers of disease and the observed beneficial effects of herbs, tree resins and minerals. One need only suppose that malfunctioning body part, or the god, ghost, or demon who was believed to be causing a particular set of symptoms was fond of the particular set of medicaments which were observed to relieve those symptoms.

Spirits could be assumed to have their preferences in terms of offerings (or to put it in ancient Mesopotamian terms, to have things which were “special” [ikkibu] to them), but also to welcome some variety in their diet and/or to give way to the odd whim. An excellent way in which a particular god, ghost, or demon could communicate exactly what it was that he wanted at any particular moment was to induce a particular set of symptoms which he knew to be treated with the desired medicaments. It therefore followed that the way to determine the cure for a particular ailment was to try out various medicaments or combination of medicaments until something worked, and to keep trying until all possible treatments had been discovered, lest the spirit world’s communication system prove to be less precise than one might have hoped.

All this may sound very strange to modern ears, but the fact is that attributing diseases to spirits is considerably closer to the modern theory of infection by organisms invisible to the naked eye attacking the body from without than is, for example, the Hippocratic notion of imbalance of humors. It should also be added that it would be difficult to find anything more encouraging to improvements through direct observation and experimentation than the ancient Mesopotamian attitude that diseases were caused by willful creatures perfectly capable of altering their demands, and that the gods of medical healing were disposed to inspire men with new ideas for treatments.

Conclusion

Up to a point, it is, of course, perfectly possible to distinguish between two categories of ancient Mesopotamian prescriptions. There are those on the one hand which were clearly inspired by some sort of demonological theory (i.e. involving the sort of manipulation of figurines, offerings of libations, prayers, and the like which one finds universally in mankind's attempts to deal with spirits), and which we would say worked, if at all, only by manipulating the patient's mind. On the other, there are remedies which can only have been suggested by the trial and error application of the various medicinal plants available in ancient Mesopotamia, and to which we might therefore be inclined to give the benefit of the doubt and to say that they "really" worked (i.e. had a physical effect on his body).

Such a division is even partially justifiable on the basis of the texts themselves. As we have seen, NAM.BÚR.BI's, libations, figurine or surrogate and magic circle prescriptions differ from other prescriptions in that they are more likely to be directed against ghostly screams or apparitions than against purely physical problems, in containing a significantly higher percentage of offerings and other peripherals as well as of recitations, and particularly those recitations which give long descriptions of various types of ghosts, and in often requiring the active involvement of the patient in the performance of the legomena and dromena of the ritual. The distinction is, however, not between "magic" and "medicine" as we define them, but between remedies directed primarily against the putative cause of the illness and those directed primarily against the symptoms which the illness has produced,¹³²⁵ those which chased off the ghost (taking the headache with it) and those which chased off the headache, (taking the ghost with it) or to put it in modern terms, remedies designed to combat the invisible causer of the disease versus medicines designed to suppress the symptoms while waiting for the disease to remit.

That something other than the modern "magic"/"medicine" distinction is in play may readily be seen from the fact that amulets, which would generally be classified by us as "magic", statistically fall firmly on what we have now defined as the "medicine" side of the line: they contain very few offerings and comparatively few recitations and such recitations as they do contain rarely mention the ghost or involve active participation by the patient.

The reason that the "magic"/"medicine" line is so hard to draw is that, in ancient Mesopotamia as indeed in "folk" magico-medical traditions generally, many plants came to be endowed with "magical" qualities precisely because they were observed to have medical effects.¹³²⁶ How else is one to account for the prophylactic use of medical remedies – i.e. taking something which can be supposed, indeed in some cases even proven, to have been of medical benefit when applied as a salve or potion and putting it into a leather bag strung about a patient's neck or even burying it in the threshold of his house?¹³²⁷

As for the so-called "placebo effect", the term patronizing used to describe the

Conclusion

observed beneficial medical effects of “magical” procedures, it should be kept in mind that, despite the most valiant efforts of modern medicine to eliminate them, it has been estimated that psychological factors still account for some 75% of the effectiveness of modern drugs: “Dans ces 75% de cas, l’action des médicaments prescrits tient non à leurs principes actifs mais à la foi que les patients ont en la technique: jadis ils croyaient aux miracles, aujourd’hui ils croient à la science et le rituel médical en prend donc les apparences.”¹³²⁸

In the tendency of modern medicine to view illness as a cosmic struggle between doctors and disease with the patient as an inconvenient battleground, it is easy to forget that healing is a cooperative process and that, if the patient refuses to be treated, there is really little that can be done. The ancient Mesopotamian āšipu should, therefore, not be faulted for using what we might term “managed placebo effect”¹³²⁹ to boost the effectiveness of such medicines as were available to him.

Summary

In conclusion, ancient Mesopotamian ghosts did their share of making spooky noises and scaring people half to death. What made them so dreadful, however, was the wide variety of medical symptoms which they were capable of producing. “Hand” of ghost was not a single disease but a set of syndromes some of which, at least (viz. seeing flashes in the eyes, having noises in the ears or being turned into a skeleton), were fairly obvious signals that a ghost was somehow involved. In some cases, the victim of a ghost-induced illness was being punished for failing in his duty to provide family ghosts with funerary offerings, but ghosts with “nobody to care for them” were notorious for pestering anybody who got in their way. Similarly, a ghost might be sent by a god as a punishment for some moral or cultic offense, but might also have been put onto the victim by an evil sorcerer with no legitimate reason to do him harm.

Whatever the circumstances, and whatever the exact problem (whether ghostly screams, apparitions or medical symptoms) the treatment of “hand” of ghost fell under the purview of the ancient Mesopotamian healing specialist known as the āšipu. It does not, however, follow either that “hand” of ghost problems were psychosomatic ailments or that all that was offered to remedy them was “hocus pocus”. Ghost prescriptions amply demonstrate that the approach of the āšipu to both diagnosis and treatment, “supernatural” causes to the contrary notwithstanding, was fully empirical. To say that a ghost was ultimately responsible for any of the conditions blamed on “hand of ghost” was not to exclude the possibility of “rational” treatment but to determine which recitations and/or rituals should be added to the medicine. Far from impeding the development of rational science, this “magical medicine” boosted the effectiveness of available medicaments by exploiting a shared belief system to involve patients in their own cure.

- 38 Nos. 61, 67, 70, 101, 103–104, 114b, 130, 140–142, 160, 162, 166, 207, 212, 223, 251–252, 255, 269–274, 300 (B), 320 (D), 333. Nos. 67, 145, 242–243, 247, 253–266, 285, 288, 296–298, 302, 317, 325, 330–331, 334–335, 340, 342–343 are too fragmentary to classify.
- 39 Note, for example, the inclusion in two Type C texts (BAM 508 i 15'–21' and LKA 145:10–15) of the recitation cited only by incipit in no. 117:4 and no. 118:5. Compare nos. 20a:2; 20c:5; 58:10; 60:6–7; 88–89:2; 110:3; 113:4; 114b:6; 137a:1; 201:15; 202:15; 248:3; 303:5.
- 40 I have suggested elsewhere (J.A. Scurlock, “Two Healing Professionals” in Mesopotamian Magic 69–79) that the reason for casting the same prescription in Type D₁ and D₂ formats (as, for example, nos. 136a-b; 163a-b; 187a-c; 191a-b; 304a-b; 308a-b) was to allow them to be used by the asû as well as the āšipu.
- 41 The usual combination is Type B and Type D parallels: nos. 20a, 20c, 20d, and 20e are Type D, but no. 20b is Type B; no. 114a is Type B but no. 114b is Type D; no. 137a is Type D, but 137b is Type B and 137c is Type C; no. 139a is Type D, but 139b is Type B. Combinations of Types A and D are also attested: no. 20f is Type A; no. 178a is Type A, but no. 178b is Type D.
- 42 No. 119 (KAR 267:1–30) is a Type A prescription but it has two Type B parallels (LKA 85 r. 1–33 // AMT 97/1+:16–41) and one Type C parallel (K 9621:1'–7'). Compare no. 120 which has one copy which is Type A (KAR 267:31–r. 24) and one which is Type C (BMS 53:1–31); and no. 143 which has two copies one of which (BAM 3 iv 31–32) is Type D and the other of which (BAM 506:2'–3') is Type B.
- 43 On the āšipu and his colleague the asû, see J.A. Scurlock, “Two Healing Professionals” in Mesopotamian Magic 69–79 (with previous bibliography).

Rec[itation for (cases where) the ears (have)] an obstruction (and) they roar” (no. 155:1, 3); “You recite these [recitations] over the suppositories and amulets for ‘If a person’s ears roar’ (no. 156:18).
- 201 No. 137a:1; cf. nos. 136b:2; 138:1. Compare: “If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person’s ears roar” (SpTU 1 no. 49:33; cf. BM 76023 + 83009 r. 2’); “If ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts a person (so that) his ears roar” (nos. 136a:1 [B]; 149a:1; 149b:1); “If his face seems continually to spin, his ears roar, (and) his limbs are continually tense, ‘hand’ of ghost” (TDP 76:60).
- 202 BRM 4.32:3b–4 (Campbell Thompson, JRAS 1924.452). Compare: “[If] ... his hearing is difficult, during the course of the illness, his neck ‘falls,’ [his right temple (seems) hot] (and) his left one (seems) cold, ‘hand’ of ghost; he will die” (TDP 126:37–38).
- 203 No. 157:1. Compare: “If a person ... (and) his ears continually ring, to cure him” (no. 158:1); “If his ears ring, ‘hand’ of gho[st]” (TDP 70:17b); “(If) his ears continually ring, ‘hand’ of ghost” (SpTU 3 no. 100:13; SpTU 1 no. 49:34).
- 204 No. 161:1. Compare: “If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person[’s] ear[s are inflamed?] ... wherever it is inflamed” (no. 159:1, 5); “If a person’s ears hurt him like ‘hand’ of ghost” (no. 163b:1).
- 205 TDP 70:17a.
- 206 Ghosts were also responsible for trauma to the neck and spine: “If he was wounded on his neck and, as a consequence, his insides are continually cramped and his feet are raised up, affliction by a ghost” (TDP 82:19); “If he was wounded on his neck and, as a consequence, his feet tremble (and) his insides are continually cramped, affliction by a ghost” (TDP 82:20); “If he was wounded on his spine and, as a consequence, he is stopped up so that his excrement cannot come out, ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost; [he will die]” (TDP 106:35; cf. TDP 236:46).
- 207 No. 173:1; “[If ‘hand’ of gho]st afflicts a person (and) his right side [continually hurts hi]m intensely” (no. 174:1–2); “[If] ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts a person (and) his left side [continually hurts him intensely]” (no. 175:1–2).
- 208 For the reading, see J.A. Scurlock, NABU 1993 no. 47.
- 209 TDP 108:20; cf. 234:31.
- 210 No. 182:1–2. Compare: “If ‘hand’ of ghost afflicts a person and it turns into a needling pain” (nos. 181:1; 183:1); “If a person has intense pain of ‘hand’ of ghost (and) needling pain so that he cannot sleep day or night” (no. 184:1).
- 211 No. 177:1, 3. Compare: “You tie it on his side (or) wherever it hurts him. [If] you recite [the recitation ov]er his side, [he will get well]” (no. 169:20–21); “Twenty-one stones for ‘hand’ of ghost. Wherever it hurts him, you bind (it) on him” (no. 176:10–11); “If ‘hand’ of ghost stays continuously in a person’s body and cannot be dispelled ... (if) you rub (the salve) on wherever it <continually> hurts him intensely, he will find relief.” (no. 178a:1, 15); “Recitation for the sting of a ghost” (no. 179:11). Note also: “To make well the evil sinew for that person, that person; to make well the bound sinew, its matter, its matter to lay before the lord, to lay before the lady. (How) to make the bound sinew well for that person I (Asalluḫi) looked into (the matter)” (no. 169:1–4).

- 212 No. 185:1–2. Compare: “[If his] right [foot] gets shrunken, ‘hand’ of Ištar or affliction by a ghost; he will die” (TDP 142:6’). Note that no. 320 is, in two texts, given as the second prescription for “If (you want) to lubricate stiff hips” (AMT 56/1 r. 5’ // AMT 69/8:11’). This was originally the sixth prescription listed in BAM 471 column i for the same problem; it is therefore possible that nos. 317, 318 and 319b. (originally nos. three to five) were also intended to treat this condition.
- 213 TDP 86:54a.
- 214 No. 193:1–2. Compare: “He does not find relief (but) [v]omits [da]y and [night]” (no. 115:8); “If the blood vessels of his temple afflict him and he also vomits blood (and) cannot take bread or beer, ‘hand’ of ghost” (SpTU 3 no. 88 ii 26); “If his temple afflicts him and ditto (he continually cries out: ‘my insides, my insides’), he vomits a lot and cannot stand the bed, ‘hand’ of ghost; he will die” (TDP 32:11; BAM 482 iv 48’ // AMT 19/1 iv 31’).
- 215 No. 194:1; “[If a ghost affli]cts a person so that his abdomen continually hurts him” (no. 196:1). Compare: “If his affliction always afflicts him at midday (and) when it afflicts him, his fever is not very great but sweat presses down on his temples (and) his eyes, and his abdomen hurts him, ‘hand’ of ghost” (STT 91+287:49’ // BM 47753 ob. 46, apud M. Stol, Epilepsy 66).
- 216 No. 197:1–2. Compare: “If, as the result of an affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person’s epigastrium gnaws at him” (no. 198:1); “If his epigastrium is hot and his insides are continually bloated, affliction by a ghost” (TDP 112:30’); “[If] his [epi]gastrium afflicts him, affliction by a ghost” (TDP 110:11’); “If his epigastrium is sore (and) he gets up and (has to) sit down, the ghost of (his) brother or sister afflicts him” (TDP 114:34’); “If his epigastrium is cramped (and) his back continually hurts him, ‘hand’ of ghost” (TDP 112:16’); “(If) his kidney gives him a jabbing pain” (no. 91:2).
- 217 No. 199:1–3. Compare: “If he continually cries out: ‘my insides, my insides’ (and) gets up and runs, a ghost, the ‘double’ of a dead person [afflicts him]” (TDP 124:26); “If he cries out softly or intermittently?: ‘my insides, my insides’, ‘hand’ of a murderous ghost; he will die” (TDP 124:27); “If ... (and) he cries out: ‘[my insides, my in]sides’, ‘hand’ of ghost” (TDP 124:34); “If ... (and) he cries out: ‘[my insides, my in]sides’, ‘hand’ of ghost; he will die” (TDP 124:35–36); “If he cries out a lot (and) is continually feverish, ‘hand’ of ghost, deputy of Ea” (TDP 184:9; K 3700++ r. 11).
- 218 Nos. 186a:1–3; 191a:1–2. Compare: “[If a gh]ost afflicts [a person] so that he belches a lot” (no. 189:1); “If his epigastrium is continually bloated, affliction by a ghost” (TDP 112:18’); “If his epigastrium is hot and his insides are continually bloated, affliction by a ghost” (TDP 112:30’); “Ditto (his affliction always afflicts him in the evening and) his insides are continually bloated (and) it keeps him awake until the middle watch, affliction by a ghost” (STT 91+287:31’ // BM 47753 ob. 29, apud M. - ob. 28, apud M. Stol, Epilepsy 63).
- 220 No. 200:1–4. Cf. “Depression continually afflicts him” (no. 115:7).
- 221 No. 202:10. Compare: “[Eleven]/forty-one stones (for) ‘hand’ of ghost and nu[m]bness [of the right hand]” (no. 201:4–5); “They have weighed out paralysis, twisting, numbness of the flesh, dizziness, šaššatu (and) insanity for me and daily they cause me to twist” (no. 226:29–30); “Ditto (his affliction always afflicts him in the evening and) his ears go numb, affliction by a ghost” (STT 91+287:34’ // BM 47753 ob. 32, apud M. Stol, Epilepsy, 64).
- 222 TDP 188:5–7.
- 223 Nos. 88–89:1. Compare: “If his face seems continually to be spinning (and) he gets up from his bed but then falls (back down again), ‘hand’ of ghost” (TDP 76:63); “[If a person’s head?] is puffed up (with) [fluid?] (and) his face [seems continually] to be spinning ... affliction by a gho[st]” (no. 203:1–2).
- 224 TDP 76:60.
- 225 TDP 118:15–16.
- 226 TDP 88:8–10. Compare: “his heart is troubled” (no. 91:3).
- 227 No. 205:1–3; “If his face seems continually to spin (and) his breaths have become short (and) his breath constantly enters his throat as if he were thirsting for water, the ‘hand’ of a ghost roving in the steppe afflicts him” (TDP 76:62).
- 228 TDP 84:32b–33. Compare: “(If) he is continually short of breath” (no. 115:4); “[If ...] he was continually sho[rt of brea]th? ... a ghost has [se]ized him while (he was) bathing in water. In order that he not be short of breath ...” (no. 206:1–3).
- 229 STT 91+287:36’ // BM 47753 ob. 34, apud M. Stol, Epilepsy 64. Compare: “If his affliction always afflicts him at midday (and) when it afflicts him, his fever is not very great but sweat presses down on his temples (and) his eyes, and his abdomen hurts him, ‘hand’ of ghost” (STT 91+287:49’ // BM 47753 ob. 46, apud M. Compare: “He says as follows: ... He does this continually for three days” (no. 1:2, 8); “Three times, to the [gho]st who meets with the person, he pours out donkey urine from an ox hoof” (no. 6:5); “For three day[s], ... as soon as ... the recitation which you have re[cited] before the god ...” (no. 218:18–19); “Before Šamaš and the stars, for three days, he repeatedly recites over it” (no. 226:13). One presumes that the instruction to recite the legomena three times means three times in immediate succession, but it should be noted that in Lamaštu, similar instructions seem to have meant more specifically once at sunrise, once at midday, and once at dusk (D.W. Myhrman, ZA 16.164:9; 192:24) and one of the ghost texts (no 303:5) also specifies this pattern.

Whenever you tie (a knot), you recite the recitation” (nos. 21:9, 11; 164:8); “You tie seven and seven knots. Whenever you tie a knot, you recite the recitation” (no. 169:18–19); “You tie three knots seven times. Whenever you tie (them), you recite (this) recitation three times before Šamaš” (no. 179:15–17).

323 It is a universal in magic that odd numbers be employed—see, for example, “To begin with, I shall twine around you three strands composed of three threads, each of a different color, and three times I shall carry your image around the altar; the divinity likes the odd number” (Virgil, Eclogues 8.71–73, apud G. Luck, Arcana Mundi 77).

- 330 As the Š-stem of tamû is rarely attested, the D-stem is the normal way of referring to the administration of oaths to fellow human beings (see AHW 1318a). Occasionally, the Š-stem of zakāru (also “to make take an oath”; see CAD Z 21b) is used instead (no. 15:7–8). For a parallel to this practice of forced oaths, note the administration of oaths to assistant daimons in the Greek magical papyri from Egypt: “But you adjure him with this [oath] that he meet you and remain inseparable and that he not [keep silent or] disobey in any way. But when he has with certainty accepted this oath of yours ...” (PGM I ca. 80, apud Betz, Papyri 5).
- 331 “(He) says as follows: “You are made to swear.” You [lift up] the reed torch” (no. 8:12); “Y[ou have] him [say] as follows ... ‘(Šamaš), let him (the ghost) be put under your [o]ath; let him be put under the oath of Ea and Asalluhi. Let him be put under the oath of the great gods of heaven and earth not to approach my body again.' He says (this) three times" (no. 217 ob. 9, r. 4–6). Compare no. 4:1–3 (a personal appeal to the ghosts containing a ritual oath formula); cf. no. 9:8–9. The only obvious exception to this rule is no. 14:1–4 where the healer both administers the ritual oath and performs the libation.

- 332 "You make it swear a ritual oath" (nos. 11:5; 131:21 [referring to ll. 22–38]; 218:24); "I have made you swear by Šamaš at his setting. You must be distant from the body of NN son of NN; you must depart; you must go away," (you) say and (you) enclose that figurine in a hole to the west" (no. 14:9–10); "You close the face (of the hole) with clay. ... You say as follows: '... By the o[at]h of heaven and earth ...'" (no. 220:35, 37, 42); "You make the two figurines of tamarisk and the seven substitute figurines (of clay) board (the sailboat). You make them swear an oath (by) the great gods of heaven and earth ... You dispatch the boat" (no. 221:7–9, 17 [referring to ll. 9–15]); "(You) put it (the figurine) in a jar and then you make it swear. You say: '[By earth may you swear]; by heav[en] may you swear; by Šamaš may you swear.'" and then (you) close its (the pot's) mouth. ... You bury it (the pot) in an abandoned waste" (no. 226:36–38); "(You) make them face downstream and (you) say as follows: 'From the body of NN, son of NN, be 3,600 double hours distant, be far away, be distant, be distant. By the great gods are you made to swear'" (no. 228:8–10).
- 333 "You take the patient's hand and then he lifts the figurine and then you have him say as follows" (no. 115:25–26); "The patient raises that figurine to his left towards Šamaš and then to his right he ties a knot. You have him say the recitation: 'Šamaš, this (is) the representation of the confusional state (causing ghost)' three times" (no. 119:7–9); "The patient raises those figurine(s) and recites before Šamaš three times the recitation: 'Powerful, exalted lord, light of the lands' " (no. 219:16–17); "The patient raises the figurine and then you have him say as follows before Šamaš" (no. 226:18). Cf. nos. 15:4; 120:7–8.
- 334 "May he swear by y[o]ur oath to cross over (and be gone)" (no. 115:48); "By yo[ur] oath make them swear. By heaven may they swear; by earth may they swear" (no. 15:7–8); "Let him be put under your oath; let him be put under the oath of Ea and Asalluḫi. <Let him be put under [the oath of the go]ds [of heaven and earth]>" (no. 120:24–25).

seem to have been expected to recite in Sumerian or “Subarean”.

- 339 No. 14:2–4, 9–10 (both Akkadian); no. 20f:6–10, 11–14 (= 20a:2) (one bilingual, one Sumerian); no. 60:6, 7 (= 267:1, 2; 275:1) (both Akkadian); no. 131:11–16 (Sumerian), 22–38 (Akkadian); no. 134:1–2 and no. 135:1–2 (both “Subarean”); no. 152:1–2, 3–4 (= 156:1–2, 3–4) (both “Subarean”); 178a:4–7, 8–13 (both Akkadian); 199:9–11, 15 (one Sumerian; one half Sumerian and half Akkadian); 218:7–14 (Akkadian), 24 (Sumerian); 221:3–4, 9–15 (both Akkadian); 232:3–4, 22 (both Akkadian).

No. 10:1–6 seems to begin with a recitation by the patient in the first person (1–3) and to end with a recitation delivered by the āšipu and referring to the patient in the third person (3–6). No. 18:10–14 begins with a personal appeal in Akkadian and ends with a ritual oath in Sumerian; the shift in languages may indicate that the oath (13–14) section was meant to be recited by the āšipu. Similarly, in nos. 5:1–3, 5–6 and 21:1–7, 12–13 we have two recitations, one long one in Sumerian and the other, much shorter one, in Akkadian, the second of which was apparently intended to be recited by the patient.

 369 No. 178a:4–5. It is perhaps not irrelevant in this context, that “Subarean” recitations, including one of those used for ghost-induced roaring in the ears (no. 139b:1) were also used to treat sagallu (BAM 129 i 12–16 // CT 23.5–14 ii 15'–16' // CT 23.2–4:18'; cf. BAM 129 i 1–6 // CT 23.5–14 ii 4'–7'; BAM 129 i 20–23 // CT 23.5–14 ii 20' ff.).
 370 Nos. 16 and 229 do not have recitations. However, the phrase “its ritual” in no. 16:1 probably indicates that a recitation preceded the preserved parts of the text. No. 229 is also fragmentary, and breaks off just after the figurine is placed in the sailboat, so it is conceivable that a recitation or ritual oath has been lost in the lacuna. No. 230 is not a set of instructions for the performance of a ritual, but a list of paraphernalia necessary for the performance of a ritual (for more on this type of text, see S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 32). As such, it would not be expected to mention any recitations.

You have him say the recitation: ‘Šamaš, this (is) the representation of the confusional state (causing ghost)’ three times” (no. 119:7–9); “The patient raises those figurine(s) and recites before Šamaš three times the recitation: ‘Powerful, exalted lord, light of the lands’” (no. 219:16–17); “The patient raises the figurine and then you have him say as follows before Šamaš” (no. 226:18).
 373 “You present those figurines to Šamaš. You have him say as follows” (no. 15:4); “You put that figurine before Šamaš. [...] win[no]wed] groats, beerbread, malt porridge [(and) ...] you continually set out [be]fore her. Before Šamaš you say as follows” (no. 220:22–25); “You make the two figurines of bīnu-tamarisk and the seven substitute figurines (of clay) board (the sailboat). You make them swear

- an oath (by) the great gods of heaven and earth” (no. 221:7–9); [You make] a substitute figurine of the person. ... You also give it a makeshift girdle ... Three times, [you say] as foll[ows]” (no. 231:2–3, 5). Compare: “You place half of that bread on the head of that person and you say three times as follows” (no. 17:7–8); “While tearing out the heart of the chicken/goose and putting it over his heart, the āšipu lays his hand(s) on him (the patient) and says as follows” (no. 199:6–8).
- 375 “You dig a pit and bury it. Be[fore Šamaš] he says [as f]ollows” (no. 12:3); “Three times, you say as follows before Šamaš ... you enclose that figurine in a hole to the west” (no. 14:8, 10); cf. “ ‘Entrust him to his family ghost(s).’ ... In his family grave you lay them (the clay figurines)” (no. 10:6, 9).
- 376 “You make [two figurines of tamarisk] which are a cubit long each. ... You say: ‘You are the rābišu-demon which seized N]N (or) the evil ghost which was set on NN. [Y]ou [have been provided with(?)] a boat.’ You tell them their names” (no. 221:1–2, 3–5); “You plant three cedar shavings around it. You surround it with a magic circle. You put an unbaked fermenting vessel over it as a cover. ... Before Šamaš and the stars, for three days, he (the āšipu) repeatedly recites over it” (no. 226:8–10, 13); cf. no. 220:17, 19.
- 377 “You raise a reed torch and then you have him recite the recitation: ‘Girra you are mighty, you are furious,’ three times” (no. 119:10–11).
- 378 “You pour out [flour made from roasted] šigūšu-grain, ..., wild grass, (and) wat[er]. You say [as follows] befor[e] [Šamaš]” (no. 14:1).
- 379 “You dig a pit in the steppe and bury it ... [You mak]e it [sw]ear a ritual oath” (no. 218:21, 24; cf. nos. 11:5; 226:36–38). Compare: “You take that figurine and bind it to a bīnu-tamarisk and you make it swear” (no. 131:20–21); “The āšipu says behind her: ‘It is time for the opener to come.’ He says (this) seven times and while he places the heart in a hole on the east (side), she closes its (the hole’s) opening with dough made from šigūšu-flour” (no. 199:15–17); “You close the face (of the hole) with clay. You mix [together] clay and sahlū and (with it) you draw fourteen lines toward the tassels(?) of the curtain[s of hi]s [bed]. You say as follows” (no. 220:35–37).
- 380 “The patient washes his body (and) [his] hea[d]. ... You [sa]y: ‘You are getting soaked’ three times. He shouts: ‘Let them get shrunk!’ He must not take (to get home) the street he took (to get there). He goes straight home” (no. 11:6–7).
- 381 One of the primary recitations (no. 5:1–3) does not make a personal appeal and is written in Sumerian; it therefore seems probable that it was meant to be delivered by the āšipu while he was filling the libation vessel with fresh water and stirring the flour into it. This would also account for the invocation of Ea (instead of the more usual appeals to Šamaš). Ea was a patron of the āšipu’s rites, and particularly of those in which sweet water played a prominent role.
- 382 “The patient lifts it (the horn) in his left hand. He [lifts] a reed torch in his right (hand and) the [o]x ho[rn] in his left and says as follows” (no. 8:4); “The patient lifts (the vessel) and holds it before Šamaš. He says as follows” (no. 9:3); “[...] which he raised. Y[ou have] him [say] as follows” (no. 217 ob. 9); “You have the patient raise water before Šamaš in the skull of a dog and then he sa[ys] as follows” (no. 217 r. 8–9). Cf. “He recites this recitation three times. [...] He pours (it) out as a libation” (no. 3:7); “He recites the rec[itation three] times. [He pours]

- that liquid [down] into the pit” (no. 4:6–7); “‘Let them receive this and leave me alone’ ... Three times, he pours out donkey urine from an ox hoof to the [gho]st who meets with the person” (no. 6:3, 5).
- 383 “You lift the horn in your right (hand and) a reed torch in your left and he says as follows” (no. 7:3).
- 384 “He washes his hands with soap and gypsum and says as follows ... He says (this) and then you fill an ox hoof with water” (no. 5:5, 6–7).
- 385 “When you have had him say this, you stand before Šamaš and say as follows ... When you have said this, the liquid which is in the ox horn in the pa[tient’s] hands he pours out.” (no. 8:7, 11); “You make a funerary offering to his family ghost, You raise [... in yo]ur [ha]nd; and, before Šamaš, you say as follows ... which he raised. Y[ou have] him [say] as follows” (no. 217 ob. 5–6, 9).
- 386 “(After making the libation), he invokes the name of the dead person. He says as follows: ‘You are made to swear.’ You [lift up] the reed torch [and say as follows: ‘F]rom this day on, head for (somewhere) else’ (no. 8:11–12); “He pours out a libation. [He sa]ys as fol[lows] ... you are [made to sw]ear [...]” (no. 9:8–9).
- 387 “You put it around his neck. The recitation: ‘From (to)day, you are kept away; from (to)day, you are loosed,’ (and) the recitation: ‘[Ghost in the muscles of his neck]’—these [recitations you recite] seven times [over (it)]” (no. 20a:2; cf. 20b:1–5; 20c:5; 20f:4–5); “[You bind (the knotted wool)] on [his] templ[e]. You have him say as follows” (no. 21:11–12); “You recite [the recitation: SAG.KI] MU.UN.DIB and then you bind it on his temple(s)” (no. 58:10); “[You recite] the recitation: [’...’ You bi]nd (it) on him” (no. 88–89:2); “You recite these [recitations] over the suppositories and amulets for ‘If a person’s ears roar’ (no. 156:18); “You recite the recitation: ME.ŠĖ.BA.DA.ŠI.RI. You bind (it) on his ri[ght] hand” (no. 201:15); “You recite the [reci]tation: ME.ŠĖ.BA.DA.ŠI.RI. You bind (it) on his hands and feet” (no. 202:15); “You recite this recitation over amulets, salves, and potions” (no. 236:5).
- 388 “You recite the recitation: dup-pir lem-nu (and) the recitation: mu-šal-lim É.KUR.RA over (it) and you fumigate him (with it)” (no. 60:6–7); “[You recite] the recitation: dup-pir lem-[nu] (and) the recitation: mu-šal-lim É.KUR.RA over the [fumigan]ts for ‘hand’ of ghost” (no. 267:1–2; cf. no. 275:1); “You fumigate him (with) atā’išu (and) nikiptu over coals. You recite [the recitation U]R.SAG^dASAL.LÚ.ĤI” (no. 117:3–4); “If, as a result of affliction by ‘hand’ of ghost, a person’s ears roar, (you use) the recitation (for cases where) his ears roar. ... You fumigate his ears (with them) over coals” (no. 137a:1, 2; cf. nos. 137b:1–2; 139b:1–2; 143:1–2); “You recite the recitation: TÉŠ.BI UR.DAR.A. [You fumigate (him with it)]” (no. 248:3); “Two recitations. [You recite (them)] over the salves and fumigants” (no. 295:4).
- 389 “You recite the recitation: ŠU.SI ĤUL.GÁL over it. If you smear (it) on his temples, it will not return to hurt him intensely (no. 110:3); “You recite the recitation: ŠU.SI ĤUL.GÁL NAM.LÚ.U₁₈.LU.K[E₄] three times. If you continually smear (it on) his head/temples, his neck, his hands and wherever it hurts him intensely, he will find relief” (no. 113:4–5); “You re[cite] the recitation: ŠU.SI ĤUL.GÁL NAM.LÚ.U₁₈.LU.KE₄: ‘The poin[ting] of the evil finger [of mankind]’ over it and then, if you continually rub his temples, his neck, (and) his eye sockets (with it), he will get well” (no. 114b:6–7; cf. 114a:18’–19’); “You recite this/these recitation(s) seven times over the salve and then, (if) you rub it on wherever it <continually> hurts him intensely, he will find relief” (no. 178a:14–15); “You recite this recitation over amulets, salves, and potions” (no. 236:5); “Two recitations. [You recite (them)] over the salves and fumigants” (no. 295:4). In one exceptional case, the recitation accompanied funerary offerings to an adult male goat whose ashes were used to manufacture the salve: “If a ghost afflicts a person, you take an adult male goat. You perform the (ceremony of the) mašhultuppû (with it). In a secluded place for three days, (in the) morning, noon, and evening, you make funerary offerings to it. ... You recite the recitation: “ḪUL.GÁL.ḪÉ.ME.EN” (in the) morning, noon, and evening. [On the fourth day] you take it out [int]o the steppe. You burn it with fire. ... You mix beer with the ashes of the mašhultuppû and you pour it out in two equal part(s) and (if) you rub [his] limbs [and] his flesh (with it), he will get well” (no. 303:1–3, 5, 13–15).

- 390 “You recite this recitation over amulets, salves, and potions” (no. 236:5).
 391 “You recite this recitation three times over the suppository. You put (it) into his ears” (no. 149a:4; cf. nos. 152:7; 153:3–4; 154:7); “You recite these [recitations] over the suppositories and amulets for ‘If a person’s ears roar’ ” (no. 156:18). Note also: “He sticks his fingers in his ears and ... wherever it is inflamed, [he says]: ‘Ea [accept? my] pr[ayer? ...]’ ” (no. 159:4–5).
 392 “Whenever you tie (a knot), you recite the recitation” (nos. 21:11; 164:8; 169:19; 179:16–17).
 393 “You pour sweet oil over the baltu-thorn (and) ašāgu-thorn (and) the magic circle. He recites the recitation seven times. You [surround] (him) with the magic circle. You must not look behind you. [When you have done this], you [have him say as fo]llows” (no. 18:7–9); “You have him sit in a reed hut. You have him face north. To Sîn, towards the setting sun, you set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper. You make a libation of cow’s milk. Towards the rising sun, you set up a censer (burning) šurmēnu-cypress. You pour out a libation of beer. That person says as follows ... He says (this) seven times and then he emerges from the reed hut and removes his garment (and) puts on a clean garment. To Sîn, he says as follows” (no. 91:7–10, 15).
 394 “[Recitation (for cases) where a person’s ears ro]ar. You say/sing (it) three times [into] his [righ]t [ear] (and) three times into his left ear” (no. 132:3); “Recitation (for cases) where a person[’s] ear[s] roar]. You recite (it) three times into his right ear (and) three times into his left ear” (no. 133:9–10); “Recitation (for cases) where his ears roar. A whispered prayer into his right ear” (no. 134:3); “[Recitation] (for cases) where his ears roar. A whispered prayer into his left ear” (no. 135:3).
 395 “He pours out a libation of beer (made from) roasted grain. Before Šamaš, he scatters juniper (on) a censer. He pours out a libation of beer. He sets out a gift for Šamaš. He says as follows” (no. 1:2); “To the right of the offering arrangement, in the shade of the west wing, you scatter ... and [sa]hlû(?). [You pour out] beer (made from) roasted grain [as a libation]. [You have him say as follows]” (no. 2:4–5).

[You] make her enter the drainage hole [to]gether with [her travel provisions] and [(you) make] her face the setting sun. (The contents) of ruqqu-bowls [you] offer. You [mak]e a (miniature) bed. You put (it) before her. You close the face (of the hole) with clay.” (no. 220:30–35); “On the seventh day, you make them board a sailboat made from ša[lālu(?)]-reed. You make the two figurines of bīnu-tamarisk and the seven substitute figurines board (it). ... You dispatch the boat” (no. 221:7–8, 17); “You plant three erēru-cedar shavings around it. ... You put an unbaked fermenting vessel over it as a cover” (no. 226:8, 9–10); “You abundantly fit them (the figurines) out. You honor them, you treat them with care. Those figurines, for three days, you seat them at the head of the patient. You pour out hot broth for them. ... You assign their travel provisions. You present them to Šamaš” (no. 228:3–5, 7); “You provide [her] with provisions” (no. 229:5).
- 608 “In his family grave you lay them (the clay figurines)” (no. 10:9); “(As for) the figurine of the dead person, (you) dig a grave and you b[ur]y it” (no. 11:5); “[Either in] the shade of a baltu-thorn or in the shade of an ašāgu-thorn, (you) dig a pit and you bury it” (no. 12:2–3); “You bury those figurines in the shade of an ašāgu-thorn” (no. 15:9); “You bury that figurine. You pour water ... over the (buried) figurine” (no. 115:50); “(You) dig a pit in the steppe and you bury it” (no. 218:22); “You bury it (the pot) in an abandoned waste” (no. 226:38).
- 609 “You divide that bread into halves. You place half of that bread on the head of that person” (no. 17:6–8); “If (you) bind (the shrew) on him, he will get well” (no. 171:2); “While tearing out the heart of the chicken/goose and putting it over his heart, the āšīpu lays his hand(s) on him (the patient)” (no. 199:6–8).
- 610 “(You) have him sit in a reed hut” (no. 91:7); “(You) say/sing (it) three times [into] his [righ]t [ear] (and) three times into his left ear” (no. 132:3); “(You) recite (it) three times into his right ear (and) three times into his left ear” (no. 133:10); “A whispered prayer into his right ear” (no. 134:3); “A whispered prayer into his left ear” (no. 135:3).
- 611 “[((You) take] used grease from the door of the main gate, [(the one which) stands] on your right when you are going out” (no. 55:1); “You uproot the root of a baltu-thorn and (you) twine it together with red-dyed wool” (no. 56:1); “These (plants) you form into burls” (no. 59:10); “These seven plants you wind into burls in red-colored wool between them” (no. 164:7); “You thread seven “male” šū-stones (on it). You wind kibrītu-sulphur, ru’tītu-sulphur, imbū tâmti (and) sikillu into seven burls” (no. 169:17–18); “[Yo]u wind (them) into [seven burls]” (no. 170:3); “You wind seven burls with red-dyed wool. You blow? oil (on them)” (nos. 201:13–14; 202:13–14); “You char the left horn of an ox (and) stag horn. You squeeze (them)

- with a dirty cloth” (no. 208:1); “You bind (it) on his temple” (no. 57:2); “You can also bind (them) on his temples” (no. 71:8); “(You) bind him wherever it stings him” (no. 179:18; cf. no. 201:15).
- 612 “You skin them” (no. 211:2); “You wipe (it) off [with] a tuft of wool” (no. 278:2); “You grind them like groats” (no. 280:2); “You crush (them)” (no. 281:2); “(You) fumigate him (with it)” (nos. 60:7; 117:3; 139a:2; 143:3; 246:7; 249:5; 258:1; 277:3; 279:2; 280:2 [A]); “You fumigate <the inside of> his ears (with them) over coals” (nos. 137a:2; 139b:2; 140:2; 141:1; 144:1; cf. 138:1); “(You) fumigate his body (with them) all at the same time” (no. 278:3); “You fumigate him (with it)” (nos. 280:2 [B]; 281:2; 282:2; 283:2; 284:2; 287:3; 316:4; cf. no. 285:2).

- 614 “You slaughter a caged goose” (no. 113:2); “You char (it) with fire” (nos. 83:2; 110:2; 113:3; 178a:3; 187b:9; 290:5; 294:4); “You grind (them) together (no. 215:2; cf. nos. 38:1; 224:5); “You pulverize (them)” (no. 178a:3); “You whisk together oil, water, and beer” (no. 165:2–3); “You put (it) out overnight under the stars” (nos. 123:3; 165:3; 174:4; 175:5); “You clarify that liquid for him (no. 174:5; cf. no. 175:6); “You rub his flesh/body with beerwort. You let (his flesh) cool” (no. 225:4); “(You) rub him (with it)” (nos. 34:1; 83:2; 88–89:2; 116:4; 173:4; 186b:2; 187b:13; 188:2; 205:4; 214:2; 215:3; 224:8; 225:4; 289:4; 290:7; 291:5; 293:2; 294:4; 298:3; 299:3; 300:3; 302:2); “You rub (them) on” (nos. 108–109:4; 301:1); “You daub (it) on” (nos. 81:2; 98:2); “You smear (it) on his neck” (no. 165:2).
- 615 “You grind (them)” (nos. 196:3; 304b:3); “You put (it) out overnight under the stars” (nos. 54:3; 82:2; 108–109:5); “You decoct” (no. 90:2); “(You) have him drink it” (nos. 189:3; 198:2; 306:4).
- 616 “(You) have him eat the flesh of an eššebu-bird” (no. 110:1); “(If) you have him eat ... [he will get well]” (no. 315:2).
- 617 “You gather (them) together” (no. 319b:4); “You press (them) out separately” (no. 161:2); “You grind (them)” (no. 320:2); “You shut (them) up in an oven. You take (it out)” (no. 320:2; cf. no. 324:1); “You let it cool” (no. 322:5); “You filter (it)” (no. 191a:5); “(If you) bathe him (with it), he will get well” (no. 190:3); “<If> (you) pour (it) into his anus, <he will get well>” (nos. 191a:6; 191b:4; 318:2; 319a:4; 319b:3–4; 320:3).
- 618 “You put (it) out overnight under the stars” (no. 153:3); “You twist a ... to your left” (no. 155:2); “(You) put (it) into his anus” (no. 192:2).
- 619 “You move the censer and the torch past him, and you purify him with holy water” (no. 115:51; cf. no. 4:7); “You [lift up] the reed torch” (no. 8:12); “You prostrate yourself and then (you) throw the burnt material into the waste land and he will get well” (no. 119:11); “You mix [together] clay and sahlû and (with it) you draw fourteen lines toward the tassels(?) of the curtain[s of hi]s [bed] ... You wash? [his] things” (no. 220:35–36, 44).

- 620 “If he drinks (it), he will get well” (nos. 108–109:6; 307:4).
- 621 “In the morning, be(fore) anybody talks with him, let him rub his neck and his body (with it)” (no. 165:3–4); “He continually bathes his face/eyes for seven days (with it)” (no. 127:6); “He sticks his fingers in his ears” (no. 159:4); “(If) he continually bathes (in it) at a crossroads, he will get well” (no. 324:2).
- 622 “He washes his [hand]s” (no. 1:9); “(He) washes his hands with soap and gypsum” (no. 5:5); “The patient [washes] his body (and) [his] hea[d]” (no. 11:6); “He removes his garment” (no. 91:15); “He bathes in well water” (no. 131:2).
- 623 “You have (him) collect(?) horse/donkey [u]rine” (no. 218:2).
- 624 “See above, Chapter 4.
- 625 “[I]n the eveni[ng(?)], he pours (it out)” (no. 9:6); “(He) pours out a libation of water and then he prostrates himself. If the ghost who afflicts him cannot be loosed, you have him do it again three times” (no. 217 r. 6–7). Note also that it is the patient who usually holds up the libation vessel: “The patient lifts it (the horn) in his left hand. (He) [lifts] a reed torch in his right (hand and) the [o]x ho[rn] in his left” (no. 8:4); “The patient lifts (the vessel) and holds it before Šamaš” (no. 9:3); “... which he raised ... You have the patient raise water before Šamaš in the skull of a dog” (no. 217 ob. 9, r. 8–9). In one text, however, the āšipu is called upon to hold the vessel and the torch for the patient: “(You) lift the horn in your right (hand and) a reed torch in your left ... (If) he extinguishes the reed torch with the water from the ox horn, ghosts will be kept away” (no. 7:3, 6).
- 626 “Before Šamaš, the patient raises that figurine to his left” (no. 119:7–8); “The patient raises those figurines” (no. 219:16); “The patient raises the figurine” (no. 226:18); cf. “The patient raises his hand(s)” (no. 115:28).
- 627 “[While eating bread] he brings [the bread] he is eating near to her and [he say]s(?) to her [as follows]: ‘Eat this! You are my substitute.’ He brings the [food porti]on he is taking into his mouth near to her and [he says to her as follows(?)]: ‘It will be given to you.’ While drinking beer, he brings [the beer] he is taking into his mouth near to her and [he s]ays to her: [‘Drink!’. ... He gives her a bed frame and a chair” (no. 220:16–22).
- 628 “You crush a potsherd from an abandoned tell in water and he sprinkles the house (with it)” (no. 1:1).
- 629 “For three days he makes funerary offerings to his family ghost(s)” (no. 1:1) vs. “you make a funerary offering to his family ghost(s)” (no. 217 ob. 5); “before Šamaš he scatters burāšu juniper (on) a censer” (no. 1:2) vs. “the āšipu sets up twenty-two censers (burning) burāšu juniper before Šamaš” (no. 226:11); “he makes a merdītu offering to Šamaš” (no. 2:2) vs. “you make a (merdītu)-offering to Šamaš” (no. 217 ob. 2). Note, however: “you plant an arrow (in the ground)” (no. 2:3).

- 665 No. 231:4. Wine is a relatively uncommon libation in ghost texts. Apart from this reference, it appears only in a necromancy prescription where offerings to Pabilsag are involved (SpTU 2 no. 20:25'–27', r. 1).
- 666 No. 91:9. The reason for this unusual libation was presumably that Sîn, the moon god, was the god being honored (no. 91:8); see above.
- 667 Usually this was an adagurru (nos. 2:3; 131:9; 219:4; 232:10 [one for each deity]). In only one case was it a pursîtu (no. 120:4). For a possible illustration of an adagurru-vessel in use, see S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 53–54.
- 668 See S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 58. Contrast the normal offering (S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 54) and note that the incense burner is shown in a different location in the two illustrations.
- 669 See, for example, “you pour (redû) a merdîtu-offering over the death wound of the sheep” (BBR no. 1–20:75) and “you pour out (redû) a libation of wine from a maqqu-bowl over the head of the (sacrificed) sheep” (Racc. 90 ob. 32–33, 91 r. 2–3; S. Lackenbacher, RA 71.41:31).
- 670 S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 56 suggests that the term merdîtu refers to a sevenfold circumambulation of the offering area. The suggestion is not implausible. However, one would think that a term implying circular motion round the offerings would have been derived from one of the verbs “to turn” or “to surround” (viz. saḥāru or lamû) rather than from redû: “to follow”.

The red color may have been designed to signal that the thrones in question were for the gods (note C.B.F. Walker and M.B. Dick, “The Mesopotamian mīs pî Ritual” 74:2; 78:37–38; 90:109–110). In a ritual to stop teeth gnashing which features a skull borrowed from a grave as the recipient of the evil, a chair covered with a cloth made from blue-green wool was used as a seat for the skull and as a locus for its funerary offerings (BAM 30:14–17); for more on this latter ritual see J.A. - 708 No. 1:1–9.
- 709 To judge from the accompanying recitation, the sacrifices to the family ghosts were expected to do double duty as an offering to the ghost causing the problems: “a funerary offering has been made for him (the ghost); water has been libated for him. May the evil (portended by) his cry go off after him” (no. 1:7).

713 W. Farber, BID 127ff.

714 Compare: “To the right of the bed, you make funerary offerings to the family ghost(s) (and) to the left of the bed to the Anunnaki gods; you pour out cold water and beer (flavored with) roasted grain as a libation” (W. Farber, BID, 129:27–29; cf. 185:15–17).

715 See above, Chapter 2.

717 “Let him/them receive this and leave me alone” (nos. 3:4; 6:3); “Šamaš, the evil ghost whom you know but (whom) I do not know shall not approach me; he shall not come near me, he shall not come close to me; keep him from coming” (no. 5:5–6); “dead persons will be kept away” (nos. 5:7; 6:5; 7:6; 217 r. 12); “to keep the dead persons away” (no. 7:1; cf. no. 9:1); “so that he may not return and meet with NN, your servant, I will give him this. Let him receive (it) from me and so not return and not meet with NN, your servant.” (no. 8:9–10); “[F]rom this day on, head for (somewhere) else” (no. 8:12); “You must not return and must not make the rounds (anywhere) i[n] the world. You must not return and mee[t] in a dream with NN, son of NN” (no. 14:2–3).

731 “Let him/them receive this and leave me alone” (nos. 3:4; 6:3); “so that he may not return and meet with NN, your servant, I will give him this. Let him receive (it) from me and so not return and not meet with NN, your servant.” (no. 8:9–10); “Let (the ghost) be loosed from my body and [let me give] it [funerary] offering [bread to e]at; let me give it funerary offering water to drink; [le]t me [sh]ow [i]t show-offerings. ... let it be loosed from my body; let it be expelled a[nd] let it eat sweet(s); let it drink sweet (things). Let it eat small bread(s); let it drink cold (water)” (no. 217 ob. 17–21).

- 732 “You are made to swear by Abatu the queen, by Ereškigal, ditto, by Ningeštinanna, the scribe of the gods, whose stylus is (made of) lapis (and) carnelian” (no. 4:2–3); “You are made to swear by the oath of Anu, Antu, Šamaš (and) the Anunnak[i] gods of heaven and earth” (no. 14:3–4); “(Šamaš), let him (the ghost) be put under your [o]ath; let him be put under the oath of Ea and Asalluḫi. Let him be put under the oath of the great gods of heaven and earth not to approach my body again” (no. 217 r. 4–6); “(He) says as follows: ‘You are made to swear.’ You [lift up] the reed torch [and say as follows: ‘F]rom this day on, head for (somewhere) else’ ” (no. 8:12; cf. no. 9:8–9).

- 744 Nos. 14:4; 115:10; 232:2. This was standard procedure whenever figurines had to be made for magical purposes—see, for example, D.W. Myhrman, ZA 16.160:23; 194:34; S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 486:20; F.A.M. Wiggermann, Figures 28:145–146 (= Ritual Texts 12:145–146). Compare F.A.M. 773 No. 218:4.

775 “You tell them their names” (no. 221:5).

776 “You write its name: ‘Figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost or evil sickness which afflicts NN, son of NN’ on the left shoulder” (no. 119:6–7); “You write their names on their left shoulders. The first name: pursuing ghost, destroyer of the widespread people, the second name: roving ghost who has no one to care for it, the third name: namtaru, anything evil, asakku, roaming dead, the fourth name: mukil rēši-demon, evil rābiš šaggašti-demon,” (no. 219:9–13); “You make [two figurines of tamarisk] which are a cubit long each. You say: ‘You are [the rābišu-demon which seized N]N (or) the evil ghost which was set on NN’ ... You tell them their names” (no. 221:1–5). Compare: “You make a figurine. You write: ‘Figurine of anything evil’ on its left shoulder” (BAM 147:26–27).

777 This sort of caution was particularly important in anti-sorcery texts, where practices were engaged in which would have made the accused sorcerer very ill or even have killed him.

778 Note: “garments for him to clothe himself with, shoes for his feet, a girdle for his waist” (no. 120:18–19).

779 Nos. 131:4–5; 220:9–10; 230:4–5; 232:6; cf. “You add to it a makeshift girdle” (no. 231:3). In other words, it was not necessary to go to the trouble of manufacturing miniature clothing to fit the figurine, a makeshift garment being sufficient for the purposes of the ritual.

780 “[If it is a man, you clothe him with a red? garment]; [i]f it is a woman, you clothe her with a black garment” (no. 13:1–2); “You clothe it with a red garment, its tillus” (no. 230:2–3).

781 No. 226:5. The choice of a lion skin may have been dictated by the fact that the figurine in question was a representation of “anything evil” (no. 226:4). According to the dream vision of an Assyrian prince (A. Livingstone, SAA 3 no. 32:7), this demon had two heads, one of which was that of a lion.

782 No. 232:6.

783 “You thread carnelian on a multicolored cord which a woman twined. You put it on her neck. You put a silver diadem on her h[ea]d.” (no. 220:11–13); “You thread carnelian/lapis on red wool. You put it on her (the female figurine’s) neck” (no. 228:3; cf. no. 226:5); “You put carnelian on her neck” (no. 229:3); cf. “Broache[s] ...” (no. 13:2); “You put its [...] down on it” (no. 14:6).

784 “You make [them] hold ...” (no. 232:6).

785 No. 131:5–6.

786 “You put a reed (made) of gold on the male figurine.” (no. 228:2).

787 “You put a [st]aff (made) of gold on the female figurine” (no. 228:2). The variant has “ears”, doubtless to make it easier for the ghosts to hear what the living were trying to tell them.

788 No. 230:7.

789 No. 10:8.

790 No. 119:5.

791 Similarly, with figurines of illnesses, witches, and the patient. Note especially “You make a wax figurine of the illness ... You melt? it (the wax figurine) with fire.” (no. 10:9); “(As for) the figurine of the living person, [you p]our out a libation into an a[dagurru]-vessel. ... “You w[ash] the figurine of the living person with pure water. You soak (it) before Šamaš. The patient washes his body (and) [his] hea[d]” (no. 11:4, 6).

794 Nos. 10–12, 15, 115, 218, 226. Nos. 14 and 220 involve closing up the figurine in a hole. Nos. 13, 16, 219 and 231–232 are missing the parts with instructions as to what was supposed to be done with the figurine.

795 “You provide [it] with a waterskin and give it travel provisions. For three days, you put out nine dishes of barley gruel before it as its food ration” (no. 226:5–6); cf. “travel provisions” (no. 230:6); “He gives her a bed frame and a chair. You set out [...] win]no[wed] groats, beerbread, malt porridge [(and) ...]. Before Šamaš you say as follows. (Addressing the figurine): ‘You have been provisioned. A dowry has been given to you. Little dwarf(?), you have been completely fitted out’ (no. 220:22–26); “You give her provisions” (no. 13:3, cf. 12).

797 No. 220:23–24.

798 Hot broth is also offered to Lamaštu; see, for example, D.W. Myhrman, ZA 16.176:41.

799 “You make funerary offerings for them. You pour out hot broth for them. You pour out beer (mixed with) roasted grain for them” (no. 219:15–16); “You stir flour made from roasted grain into water and beer and then you pour out a libation for it” (no. 226:7); cf. “You pour out a libation of [...] for her” (no. 13:2).

800 “[You make] a substitute figurine of the patie[nt]” (no. 231:2); “This (masc.) is given as my substitute; this (fem.) is given in my stead” (no. 15:7); cf. “Eat this! You are my substitute ... As the substitute and in the stead of [NN so]n of NN you have been given” (no. 220:17, 26–27). Compare: “In order [to give] a substitute to Erešk[igal], when the sun goes down, the patient has a vir[gin] she-goat li[e] in bed with him” (LKA 79:1–3 // KAR 245:1–2; see A. Tsukimoto, kispum 125); “Just as Ea did, I purified the clay. I pinched (it) off. I [ma]de a figurine of wood and reed as my substitute” (Šamaš 78; see W.R. Mayer, OrNS 61.373–374); “I have given them (the figurines) as a substitute for my flesh and my figure” (BAM 234:34; see E.K. Ritter and J.V. Kinnier Wilson, AnSt 30.25). For the use of substitutes in NAM.BÚR.BI’s, see S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 72–93.

801 No. 220:30.

802 “[You ma]ke [figurines of the dead persons]. You [have] th[em] lie down with the patient. On the third day ...” (no. 15:1–2); “[For three days] she (the figurine) lies [o]n the bed with him [and] his (real) wife (sleeps) apart. [On] the left [side(?)] of the bed for three days, [he t]rea[ts h]er like a w[if]e” (no. 220:14–15). Compare leaving the figurine on the patient’s roof for three nights (no. 226:7–13).

803 “You take the patient’s hand and then he lifts the figurine” (no. 115:25); “The patient raises those figurine(s) and recites before Šamaš” (no. 219:16–17); “The patient raises the figurine and then you have him say as follows before Šamaš” (no. 226:18); cf. no. 232:23.

804 “You put a [c]opper chain on it” (no. 218:5).

Ghost figurines may have been slightly manhandled but they were spared the spiteful treatment which awaited witch figurines; see, for example, Maqlû III 17–21, IX 40–41; III 102–103, IX 48; III 116–117, IX 49–51; III 123–126, IX 52–53; III 165–168, IX 58; III 190–191; IV 1–2, 69–70, IX 60–65.

811 No. 218:7–14.

812 “You make it swear a ritual oath” (no. 11:5; no. 218:25); “I have made you swear by Šamaš at his setting. You must be distant from the body of NN son of NN; you must depart; you must go away” (no. 14:9–10); “By the oath of Anu, Antu, Šamaš (and) the Anunnak[i] gods of heaven and earth you are made to swear” (no. 14:3–4); “By yo[ur] oath make them swear. By heaven may they swear; by earth may they swear. [May they be loos]ed [from] my body” (no. 15:7–8); “May he swear by y[o]ur oath to cross over (and be gone)” (no. 115:48); “By the o[at]h of heaven and earth [...] and ... - 848 “You seat those figurines, for three days at the head of the patient. You pour out hot broth for them. On the third day, the twenty-ninth, when the ghosts are (customarily) provided with food offerings, you make a sailboat. You assign their travel provisions” (no. 228:4–7); “In groups of seven and seven, you put out a food portion for it ... You provide it with provisions (consisting of) groats, malt, beerbread, (and) dried bread” (no. 131:5, 18–19); “You provide [her] with provisions [... You give her] a comb and a blackened pot” (no. 229:5–6). Compare: “<Šamaš, in your presence have I sought him out and assigned him> ... a waterskin (filled with) water for him to drink (and) malt flour. <I have given him travel provisions.>” (no. 120:18, 19–20).

- 854 “Let him be put under your oath; let him be put under the oath of Ea and Asalluḫi. <Let him be put under [the oath of the go]ds [of heaven and earth].> Let him not come near me; let him not come close to me; [let him not approach me]; let him not reach me” (no. 120:24–26); “(By) the lord of gods have I made you swear, etc. ... May you be loosed; may you be removed; may you be removed” (no. 131:22–38); “You make them swear an oath (by) the great gods of heaven and earth” (no. 221:8–9).
- 855 No. 131:20–21 (= KAR 22:20–21). Compare: “[You put out] bīnu-tamarisk and [*maštaka*l]. You make [the figurine] stand [on i]t” (no. 120:7–8).
- 856 No. 131:1–10. The text of the recitation is given in ll. 11–16 (see Chapter 4).

- 868 In addition to the text quoted immediately below, see no. 229, which also involves the outfitting of a figurine dispatched by boat. For other examples of the use of boats to get rid of evils, see Lamaštu (D.W. Myhrman, ZA 16.170:44–172:46) where the demon is sent across the Ulai to the sea in a sailboat; cf. Maqlû III 128–139; O.R. Gurney, Iraq 22.221–227. Similar practices are attested from Malaysia and Indonesia—see M. Eliade, Shamanism 356–357.

- 878 An interesting parallel to this practice is to be found in China: “if anybody is hit by a specter’s blow, ... that same cock must be cut up, and the two halves folded over his breast below his heart, and when they have become cold, they must be thrown away on the roadside” (J.J.M. de Groot, China 6.969).
- 879 The text has “east” but, to judge from the location of pits dug to receive ghost figurines (see above), this should have been to the west.

- 883 Compare: “He must not look behind him. He goes straight to his house” (no. 115:52); “[You mak]e it [sw]ear a ritual oath; you must not look behind you” (no. 218:24). This prohibition on looking back is found also in Greek magic—see, for example: “[But] when you are dismissed, [go without shoes] and walk backwards and set yourself to the enjoyment of the food ... [coming] face to face as companion [to the god]” (PGM I ca. 40, apud Betz, Papyri 4 with n. 11); “Bring ashes, Amaryllis, and throw them over your head into the running brook, and don’t look back!” (Virgil, Eclogues 64–109, apud Luck, Arcana Mundi 78). Note also “whatever was on (him/her), [that] she (the Old Woman) puts behind her into the river” (KUB 12.58 iii 13–14 [A. Goetze, Tunnawi 14.16–17]).
- 884 No. 171:1–2.
- 885 No. 17:1–10. Similar processes by which the evil was drawn off into some inanimate object which was then disposed of are known from other magical texts. See, for example, Šurpu V/VI 144–171, VII 1–87 and O.R. Gurney, AAA 22.86:115–137. For a fuller discussion, see S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 72–93.

 893 Nos. 15:9–10; 218:23. Compare: “You plant three cedar shavings around it (the figurine). You surround it with a magic circle” (no. 226:8–9).
 894 Compare: “You mix [together] clay and sahlû and (with it) you draw fourteen lines toward the tassels(?) of the curtain[s of hi]s [bed].” (no. 220:35–36). Fourteens usually consist of two groups of seven. Assuming, then, that this passage implies seven lines to the right of the bed and seven to the left, the patient’s bed would seem to have been hemmed in with a protective grid.

 910 Note that salves are sometimes also used as fumigants as in no. 227:7 (cf. no. 250:1–2). Compare no. 280:1–2 (fumigant) and the virtually identical no. 293:1–2 (salve). Similarly, washes may also double as salves (no. 317:1).
 911 No. 180:2–3. Compare nos. 19:2; 34:1; 205:4; 212:1; 214:2; 289:4. Note also no. 208:1–5 (amulet) and the virtually identical no. 213:1–6 (salve) or no. 209:1 (amulet) and the virtually identical no. 214:1–2 (salve); cf. 204:1 (amulet) and 205:3–4 (salve); 204:3 (amulet) and no. 212:1 (salve).

 915 No. 22:2 (dead ewe and dormouse tendon); nos. 25:2; 30:2 (dead cow and dor-

- mouse tendon); cf. nos. 26:2; no. 37:3–4.
- 916 No. 22:2 (ewe); nos. 25:2; 30:2 (cow); cf. nos. 26:2; no. 37:3–4. Note, however “You la[ce ... up] in the hide of a virgin she-goat” (no. 222:7); “You lace it in a bag made from gazelle hide” (no. 289:4 [C]).
- 917 Exceptionally, a burl could be formed without protective wrapping (nos. 59:11; 169:18).

- 920 Nos. 164:8; 201:14; 202:14. Compare sprinkling the burls with oil (nos. 169:19–20; 201:14; 202:14) or sprinkling knots with a mixture containing cedar oil and materia magico-medica (no. 21:10–11).
- 921 Nos. 19:2; 57:2.
- 922 “[You take] used grease from the door of the main gate, [(the one which) stands] on your right when you are going out. ... You wrap (it) in a tuft of wool and [you bind it on his temple(s)]” (no. 55:1–2). Since it was the practice in ancient Mesopotamia to put a shoe of copper round the bottom of the wooden doorpost before placing it in the stone pivot, such grease would have been impregnated with copper oxide, a well known disinfectant. Compare “used [grease] from the right and left doorjambs of the Marduk temple” in a salve (no. 299:2–3).
- 923 It is also interesting to note how many of the “amulets” are tied directly onto the hurting part: “[If a ghost] afflicts [a man] so that he continually has a headache ... you bind it on his temple(s)” (no. 58:1, 10; cf. no. 57:2); “For headache ... you can (also) bind it on his temples (as an amulet)” (no. 71:7–8); “Incantation (for cases where) as a result of affliction by a ghost his neck hurts (him) ... You put (it) on his neck” (no. 164:3, 9); “You tie it on his side (or) wherever it hurts him” (no. 169:20); “You bind (it on) him wherever it stings him” (no. 179:18); “[Ten] stones (for) ‘hand of ghost’ and numbness [of the right hand] ... You bind (it) on his right hand” (no. 201:4–5, 15); “Forty-one stones for ‘hand of ghost’ (and) numbness of the hands and feet ... You bind (it) on his hands and feet.” (no. 202:10, 15).
- 924 Nos. 20a–f, 58–59, 71, 123, 127, 164, 169, 176, 201–202, 237. In some cases, the stones were ground and treated like other ingredients (no. 127:4–5, 8; cf. nos. 71:6, 8; 123:3–4).
- 925 “Twenty-seven stones for emplacement of the intense pain of ‘hand of ghost’ or mukil rēš lemutti not to approach a person. ... These (plants) you form into burls. You put (it) on his neck” (no. 59:8–9, 11); You thread (the stones) on a multicolored strand. ... These seven plants you wind into burls in red-dyed wool between them” (no. 164:4, 7); “You thread (the stones on the cord). ... Between the stones, you wind seven burls with red-dyed wool” (no. 201:6, 12–13; no. 202:11, 13–14). Compare: “You thread these [stones] on hair from a virgin she-goat, gazelle tendon, (and) male ašlu-rush [twined (together)]. ... [T]hese [plants], wherever (there is) a knot, you wrap (them) in red-dyed wool” (no. 58:5–6, 9; “You thread seven “male” šū-stones (on the cord). You wind kibrītu-sulphur, ru’tītu-sulphur, imbū tâmti (and) sikillu into seven burls” (no. 169:17–18); “[You thread] these [stones] on red dyed wool (and) gazelle tendon tw[ined (together)]” (no. 20b:5; cf. nos. 20a:1–2; 20c:2–3).

- 926 “You twine white wool (and) red wool” (no. 20a:1); “You twine red wool (and) white wool together into a cord” (no. 169:17). Compare: “You twine together carded wool and red-dyed wool” (no. 21:9).
- 927 “[You thread] these [st]ones on red dyed wool (and) gazelle tendon tw[ined (together)]” (no. 20b:5); “[You threa]d (the stones on) gazelle tendon [(and) red dyed wool]” (no. 20c:2–3). Compare: “You twine together (the root of a baltu-thorn) red-dyed wool” (no. 56:1); “You twine (together) whi[te] wool (and) male ašlu-rush” (no. 88–89:2); “You twine together the hair of a virgin she-goat (and) the hair of a virgin <lamb> (into) a cord.” (no. 179:14–15; cf. no. 243:2).
- 928 “You thread (the stones) on a multi-colored cord” (no. 164:4). Cf. nos. 55:2; 172:2; 202:11; 216:4.
- 929 “You thread these [stones] on hair from a virgin she-goat, gazelle tendon, (and) male ašlu-rush [twined (together)]” (no. 58:5–6); “You twine [mul]ti-colored [wool], male ašlu-rush, (and) palm frond from a male (palm)” (no. 201:4–6).
- 930 “You tie seven knots” (nos. 21:9; 164:8; 170:3); “You tie seven and seven knots” (no. 169:18–19); “You tie three knots seven times” (no. 179:15–16).

- 958 Some of the odd ingredients (as “human flesh” in no. 60:5) may be esoteric names for plants. According to Uruanna I 266–267 (apud CAD I/J 182a), “lion fat” (nos. 252:1; 266:1; 283:1) is actually an esoteric name for irrû resin. Similarly, according to Uruanna III 43 (apud CAD H 144b), the “(tuft of) black (hair) from the thigh of a donkey” (nos. 255:1; 278:1) was an esoteric synonym for ^u*hašû*.

In some cases, oils

- are simply listed among the ingredients (nos. 47:1; 125:2; 165:2; 297:1; 301:1). Exceptionally: “You mix (it) with aromatics” (no. 42:2); “You grind (them) in ghee” (nos. 81:2; 112:3; 124:2); “You grind (them) in caul fat from the kidney of an ox which is as black as (the effect) of kammu-plant on copper” (no. 122:6); “You gr[ind] black obsidian in goo[se] fat” (no. 124:4); “You mix in the blood of a black snake” (no. 177:2); “You mix (it with) ‘human sperm’” (no. 199:20); “You mix (it) with sheep fat” (no. 224:7); “You rub his flesh/body with beerwort. You let (his flesh) cool” (no. 225:4); “You boil (them) in ox blood (and) in goat blood” (no. 303:12).

Compare softening (no. 116:3) or squeezing with a dirty cloth (no. 213:1–2). In one case, a sort of mud pack was used (no. 165:1–2).
- 1005 Nos. 82:2; 123:3; 165:3; 174:4; 175:5. Compare: “[You he]at (it) up [in an oven]. In the morning, you take it out and you rub [him] (with it in) oil” (no. 183:3).
- 1006 Nos. 71:1–7; 87:1–3; 89:3; 114a:16'–18'; 114b:4–5; 122:3–6; 124:2–4; 127:1–5; 147:1; 178a:2–3; 188:1–2; 213:2, 5–6; 215:1–2; 299:1, 3; cf. nos. 98:2; 123:1–2; 124:1; 125:2; 178b:1; 184:3; 214:1; 290:3; 291:1–2; 300:1.
- 1007 See J. Bellakhdar, Médecine traditionnelle no. 11.
- 1008 Nos. 46:2; 48:1; 49:1–2. Other odd-looking ingredients found in apparition salves are: “human semen” (no. 47:1; cf. no. 199:20) and “hair from a lion's hide” (no. 49:2). Note also that, in one headache salve, the patient is required to eat the bird from whose bones the salve is manufactured (no. 110:1; cf. no. 113:2); compare a salve for heartburn which is manufactured from a chicken/goose (no. 199:19–21) whose heart and blood are also used to draw off the evil by rite of transfer (no. 199:5–18, 22–25). Eye salves using caul fat specify that it should be taken from a black ox (no. 122:6). One pain salve uses the blood of a black snake as a lubricant (no. 177:2; cf. no. 224:6) and a salve for neurological disorders includes some obscure part of a corpse (no. 224:5; cf. no. 297:1). Note the “left horn of a male goat” in no. 213:1, the ox horn of no. 290:5, human skull in no. 293:1 and ape hair in no. 300:1. “Human fat” as in no. 300:2–3 may be a learned name for the resin of irrû.
- 1009 Similarly, one headache salve contains “dust from an abandoned waste” (no. 70:1) and another requires the ašāgu-thorn to have been collected from a tomb (no. 104:3); one neckache salve specifies that the soothing plaster is to be made with dust from a crossroads (no. 165:1). Used grease was presumably taken specifically from the Marduk temple (no. 299:2) due to this god's role as a patron of healing magic; compare, for example, the water from the well of the Marduk temple used in AMT 76/5:5 (stroke). Note also the inclusion of the ashes of a mašhultuppû in no. 303:13.

- 1011 Nos. 70:2; 71:7; 89:1–3; 110:3. Compare rubbing it on the temples and neck muscles (no. 86:3) or the temples, eyes, and neck (nos. 87:4; 114a:18'–19'; 114b:7) or the temples, neck, and hands (no. 113:4–5). Note the earwash whose ingredients were also rubbed on the temporal arteries (no. 147:1–2).

- 1019 No. 215:2–3. The latter text gives this as an alternative prescription for “I[f (you want)] to remove ‘mountain’ [li'bu which afflic]ts (him)” (KUB 29.58+59+KUB 37.84 v 14 [see G. Meier, ZA 45.208]). In TDP 24:51, “mountain” li'bu is described as a condition in which one’s head is hot, but one’s hands and feet are cold.
- 1020 No. 227:7.
- 1021 “You repeatedly rub (it) on the bottom of his feet before he sets foot on the ground” (nos. 38:1; 39:1; 40:1; 42:1; 44:2; 45:2).

One might well suspect witchcraft of causing such experimental failures, but this hardly qualifies šaman latāki as “oil used in witchcraft or the like”.

- 1250 “Il faut souligner que le verbe de la proposition énonçant les symptômes est au permansif ... ou bien à l’inaccompli (présent), contrairement aux protases des textes divinatoires. L’accompli sert exclusivement à rappeler les causes qui ont provoqué l’état pathologique ou à souligner un fait qui a précédé l’apparition des symptômes ... Dans les textes divinatoires le verbe de la protase est toujours à l’accompli (préterit) indiquant ainsi que les faits ou états d’écrits sont considérés comme terminés et donc irréversibles et qu’il ne reste donc plus au devin qui a en tirer les conséquences ominieuses. Dans les tests médicaux par contre, les symptômes ou états morbides sont décrits au présent parce que ce sont des processus non encore achevés dont le cours peut être changé grâce à un traitement adéquat. En cela donc la médecine apparaît comme une technique éminemment pratique” (P. Herrero, La thérapeutique mesopotamienne 36).

What could be more trifling than shedding one’s beard hair, yet this was provably blamed on supernatural causes: “If the hair of a man’s cheeks falls out a lot, his god and goddess are angry with him” (BAM 480 iii 48). And what could be more alarming than continually hurting shoulders, continual tiredness, continual forgetfulness, bad dreams, hair standing on end, incessant vomiting, and inability to sleep day or night, yet this was attributed to constriction of the urethra (AMT 31/1:3–5).

- 1297 "Hippocrates, like the Babylonian hemerologies and extispicy texts, occasionally recommends the doctor not to treat the patient (epicheirein, encheirein). Mūri suspects a prerational attitude behind this ... The expertise of the conjurer fits this" (M. Stol, JEOL 32.62; cf. also E.K. Ritter, AS 16.301–302; P. Herrero, Thérapeutique 24–25).
- 1298 See above, Chapter 1.
- 1299 The often quoted assertion that the relationship between the "diagnostic omens" and the therapeutic texts is either non-existent or obscure can be traced back, via E.K. Ritter, AS 16.299 to an article by J.V. Kinnier-Wilson in Iraq 19. Consultation of this article reveals that what lead the author to assert "were A.M.T. all āšipūtu one would expect a much closer connection with the manual sa-gig than research can provide" (p. 46) was quite simply that the TDP passages which are quoted verbatim in AMT and BAM appear there in a different order than they do in TDP. “What is striking and obviously significant about this table, however, is that the line numberings go in opposite directions, that is to say, in order to obtain the correspondences one has to read the first tablet downwards and the second text upwards. The observations suggests that the two texts were never meant to be considered together, and that an original relationship with sa-gig has been purposefully [emphasis mine] disclaimed or disguised” (p. 46). Compare: “This (therapeutic) handbook was completely independent of TDP ... The fact that identical groups of entries can be found together in both handbooks ... (is negated by the fact that) the sequence of lines often is different” (M. Stol, JEOL 32.49). Since a careful study of the medical texts reveals that there was no canonical order for the medical prescriptions and that it is not at all uncommon for two texts of the BAM or AMT series to quote the same prescriptions in different, even inverse order (see above, Chapter 1), these arguments are essentially invalid.

- 1300 On this point see also G. Contenau, Médecine 166. It was his contention that ancient Mesopotamian medicine never got very far because it was based in philosophy: “Les défauts de leur théorie sont ceux qui entachent tous les symptômes médicaux, et ils sont nombreux, qui ont pris comme point de départ, en dehors de l’observation, une idée philosophique. L’idée de maladie, punition de la divinité n’est ni plus ni moins soutenable que celle des tempéraments.” In seeing the ancient Mesopotamians as a variant on Hippocrates, however, Contenau was quite wrong; as we have seen above, the theory that illness is a punishment for divine anger is Yahwist, not ancient Mesopotamian. In any case, although Contenau noticed what he recognized as empirical use of medicaments in texts where what he supposed to be “natural” causes were at work (p. 193) and hailed this as “l’aurore d’une médecine nouvelle” (p. 169), he allowed his personal disgust for “dreckapoteke” (p. 162) to blind him to an equally empirical use of medicaments in texts, such as “hand” of ghost prescriptions, where what would usually be classed as “supernatural” causes were invoked (see below).

- 1309 Note, for example, the attitude of Henry F. Dowling as cited in J.M. Riddle, Dioscorides xxii.
- 1310 “In fact, almost every classical pharmacologic is derived from a classical botanical source originally employed as a native remedy” (apud J.M. Riddle, Dioscorides xxii).
- 1311 (R.D. Biggs, RLA 7.625; cf. Ibid. CANE 1914). The opinion is quite common but not entirely universal; note P. Herrero, La thérapeutique mesopotamienne 46–47,

- 49–50 and especially R. Labat, Médecine 18.
- 1312 For example, henna (Lawsonia inermis) is a folk treatment for bronchitis. It is not, however, either an expectorant or antihistamine but a bactericide specific to Diplococcus pneumoniae (Medical Plants of India, vol. 2.140). Perhaps even more surprisingly, garlic is not only “good to keep vampires away” but is bacteriostatic to Bacillus typhi abdominalis, Eberthella typhosa, Virus cholerae, Bacillus dysenteriae, etc. (G. Garnier et al, Ressources, vol. 1.235).
- 1313 See C. Craig, Modern Pharmacology 159.
- 1314 See C. Craig, Modern Pharmacology 495.
- 1315 “Vom modernen Standpunkt aus gesehen, war dies Therapie vollendet psychosomatisch” (D. Golz, Studien 13). Compare, from a cuneiformist: “Mesopotamian medicine remained always at a low state of development. Herodotus makes his opinion clear when he speaks of Babylonians bringing their sick to the market in order to inquire of passers-by what remedies they would suggest” (A.L. Oppenheim, Ancient Mesopotamia 299).
- 1316 See J.A. Scurlock, Incognita 2.153–160.
- 1317 See, for example, J.M. Riddle, Dioscorides 7–8.
- 1318 See G. Majno, Healing Hand 150–152.

- 1323 See G. Majno, Healing Hand 150–176.
- 1324 See above, Chapter 5.
- 1325 On this point, see also D. Golz, Studien 10.
- 1326 See, for example, M. Cátedra, Worlds 52.
- 1327 See above, Chapter 5 and compare SpTU 5 no. 246 iv 13–20 where seven medicinal plants are buried to the right and left of the threshold of the outer gate of a house to prevent the entry of sickness, di’u, restlessness and epidemics. It also follows that the use of a particular plant or wood in a purely “magical” context by no means, contra M. Stol, JEOL 32.58 n. 103, disqualifies it from having medical value. “Tamarisk” (bīnu) is certainly used to manufacture figurines; this cannot, however, detract from the fact that the bark and galls have a percentage of tannic acid large enough for their use (as a substitute for oak galls) in British Pharmacopicia (K.M. Nadkarni, Indian Materia Medica, vol. 1:1194–1195).
- 1328 J. Bellakhdar, Médecine traditionnelle 106. Compare Journal of the American Medical Association for May 25, 1994: Judith Turner has been studying placebo effect and concludes that up to 70 per cent of the effect of modern medicine is due to the placebo effect.
- 1329 See above, Chapters 4–5.

PART II

A: The Order of Presentation

Prescriptions are ordered and numbered in accordance with the following scheme. The two “ghostly scream” prescriptions come first (nos. 1–2), followed by apparitions (nos. 3–54) and then physical problems (nos. 55–227) with a category of broken or unspecified “hand” of ghost ailments at the end (nos. 228–352). Within each category, prescriptions are numbered in accordance with the procedure employed, beginning with ghost NAM.BÚR.BI’s, proceeding via libations, figurines and other surrogates, magical encirclement and amulets to fumigants, bandages, salves, aliments, potions, washes, and suppositories. Text numbers quoted with little a, b etc. mark series of passages which represent essentially the same prescription but which are sufficiently different that it seemed more profitable to deal with them separately rather than attempting to include them in a combined score.

B: Transliterations, Translations, Textual commentary

In order to avoid unnecessary repetition, bibliography on previous treatments of the texts cited here (with the exception of comments on the treatments of specific lines), is given only once for each sigla. So that this information may not be buried in the midst of the treatments of individual passages and so lost to the reader, I have put it in the chart in the appendix which gives the arrangement of prescriptions on the original tablets (Part IIC). In the following translations, parentheses indicate supplied words, full and half brackets broken or partially effaced sections of text and pointed brackets places where one of a number of parallel texts contains words or phrases not found in the others. Translations of medical terminology and interpretations of disease entities are discussed and justified in Scurlock and Andersen, Diagnoses in Assyrian and Babylonian Medicine to which the reader is referred. Plant names are, with a few exceptions, left untranslated and uncommented upon since there is yet too much uncertainty in plant identifications. It is hoped that research in connection with a planned volume on ancient Mesopotamian medical therapies will shed further light on this topic.

Line Commentary

- 18: ú-<te>-el-li-<il>-ma – from utallulu: “to purify oneself” with -ma. This interpretation seems preferable to I. Finkel’s ^Ú.SIKIL.LE-ma ina Ì ... ŠÉŠ: “you anoint him with ^Ú.SIKIL ... in oil” (Finkel, AfO 29/30.11) both on grounds of syntax and in view of the fact that the sikillu-plant ought properly to have been written ^Ú.SIKIL.LA.

Translation

1. In order to avert the evil (portended by) a ghost’s cry, you crush a potsherd from an abandoned tell in water and he sprinkles the house (with it). For three days, he makes funerary offerings to his family ghost(s).
 2. He pours out a libation of beer (made from) roasted grain. Before Šamaš, he scatters burāšu-juniper (on) a censer. He pours out a libation of beer. He sets out a gift for Šamaš. He says as follows:
3. “Šamaš, judge of heaven and earth, foremost of the Anunnaki; Šamaš, judge of (all) lands; Šamaš, foremost, resplendent one,
 4. you are the one who keeps them (the ghosts) in check; Šamaš, judge, (you bring) the things above below;

5. you bring the things below above. The ghost which cried out in my house,
 6. whether he be (the ghost of my) father (or) mother, or brother (or) sister or the son of somebody or other or a roaming ghost with no one to care for him,
 7. a funerary offering has been made for him; water has been libated for him.
May the evil (portended by) his cry go off after him.
 8. May the [e]vil (portended by) his cry of evil not approach me.” He does this continually for three days and then ...
 9. He washes his [hand]s and he purifies himself(?) and rubs on oil. It (the ritual) is finished.

Line Commentary

- 2: ana ^dUTU ú-red-di: “he makes a merdītu-offering to Šamaš”; compare ana ^dUTU tu-red-di in LKA 84: 2 (= no. 217: 2). The reading and interpretation follow R.I. Caplice, OrNS 39.141 no. 41: 4 and I.L. Finkel, AfO 29/30.12: 20. For more on this type of offering, see Part I, Chapter 5.
- 19: ZI.GA: “apparition”–for this interpretation, see I.L. Finkel, AfO 29/30.12.
- 20: The copy of K 2779 has what may be read as the expected EDIN. E. von Weiher reads [lu ina ūri] lu ina šēri instead of [ina še]-rim! as would seem to be required by the parallels. The sign at the end of line 3 of SpTU 4 no. 137 is GÌR^{II}, and does not need to be emended to SAR. The number of portions in line 5 of SpTU 4 no. 137 is not 12.TA.ÀM but 2.TA.ÀM (the “10” is actually the last wedge of the MEŠ of ŠUK.MEŠ).
- 22: É IM.4-ri–the west wing of the house; for IM.4 as amurru: “west”, see CAD A/2.92b; AHw 46a. For scatterings etc. to the right and left of the offering arrangements, compare W. Farber, BID 129.27–29; S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 56 (A 187: 48’).

Translation

1. If a ghost cries out in a person's house, (there will be) death in the person's house. If an evil apparition appears in a person's house, in order that this evil not approach the person and his house,

Line Commentary

- i 26'ff: Transliterations of CT 23.15-22++ are based on a photograph obtained with the kind permission of the Trustees of the British Museum. The text has subsequently been collated against the original.
- i 26': ʾih-ta?-na-bal?-an?-niʾ?!—the reading is conjectural, as only the bottoms of the lines are preserved. G. Castellino, OrNS 24.244 restores ʾKIʾ-[ia NU DU₈-ru].
- i 28': Castellino suggests restoring: [za-kir MU NU TUKU-u]. For other possibilities, see no. 217: 22–32.
- i 29': Castellino restores [ana GIDIM IM.RI.A-šú pi-qid]-su after i 45'. However, that prescription is a surrogate burial (to which such a phrase would be appropriate), whereas this is a propitiatory libation.
- i 30': “continually sees”—IGI.MEŠ could indicate either the Gtn or the N stem of amāru. Since, however, the N stem in the meaning “to meet” takes either itti or a double subject (see CAD A/2.26–27 s.v. amāru mng. 8), and since this text is usually consistent in using IGI.IGI, construed with itti, for the N stem form, it is more likely that the Gtn is meant here and in similar passages (viz. i 36', 46', 52'; ii 31'; iii 1, 12, 17; iv 5, 10, 13).
- i 31': ZÌ ŠE.SA.A—both dictionaries interpret this ingredient as flour made from roasted grain (CAD L 97a s.v. laptu B mng. b 2'; CAD Q 59b s.v. qalītu mng. b; AHw 526a s.v. lābtu). A NÍG.ÀR.RA(?): "groat water" usually appears with these other types of water, but it is not clear whether there is actually enough room for it here. For a discussion of this ingredient, see below under no. 7.

- i 32': "flour made from roasted šigūšu-grain"—for this ingredient see also i 37' and ii 31' (there written with ša instead of šá). G. Castellino, OrNS 24.246 suggests reading *ina pa-an*¹ [... mi-tu]-ti at the end of the line.

Line Commentary

i 54': la DIM₄-qá!—text A has a LUḪ sign rather than the expected qá. a-lak-ta-šú TAR-us: “keep him from coming”—from the context, one might expect this sentence to end with a precative with the ghost as referent. However, alaktu + pronoun suffix with parāsu seems always to refer to the action of blocking someone else’s path (see CAD A/1 299a s.v. alaktu mng. 3 b), and I have therefore taken the verb as an imperative with the god Šamaš as the referent. Compare KAR 21: 1, 12 (see no. 10) which reads—^dUTU ... ana GIDIM₄ IM.RI.A-šú pi-qid-su: “Šamaš ... entrust him to the ghosts of his relatives.”

Translation

4. Recitation (to be used when) one continually sees dead persons.
5. Its ritual: he washes his hands with soap and gypsum and says as follows. “Šamaš, the evil ghost whom you know but (whom)

 7. you fill an ox hoof with water. You put flour made from šigušu-grain into it. You stir (it into it) with a blade of elpetu-grass before Šamaš. If he pours it out as a libation, dead persons will be kept away.

Line Commentary

- ii 10: an-nam lim-ḥu-ru-ma ya-a-ši li-maš-ši-ru-nin-ni: “let them receive this and leave me alone”—J. Bottéro, ZA 73.188 takes this as a request to the sun god “que le mort en question fût ‘reçu’, apparemment là où on l’avait expédié: en Enfer pour libérer le malade.”

Translation

1. Recitation: “Šamaš, king of heaven and earth, judge of the things above and the things below, lord of the dead, leader of the living,
 2. Šamaš, the dead persons who were set on me and so are seen (by me), whether they be the ghost of my father or mother, or the ghost of my brother
 3. or sister, let them receive this and leave me alone.”
4. Its ritual: In the morning, you sweep the ground at the [canal] ba[nk]. You sprinkle pure water. You set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper before Šamaš. You pour out a libation of beer.
 5. Three times, to the [gho]st who meets with the person, he pours out donkey urine from an ox hoof and then dead persons will be kept away.

Line Commentary

27: A NÍG.ÀR.R[A]: “groat water”–CAD M/2 202 claims that A NÍG.ÀR.RA is not “water (extracted from) groats” but “a logogram for an unknown substance measured in silas which is usually not the case with liquids in medical texts”. On the surface of it, this statement seems odd, since silas are a normal measurement for liquids in ancient Mesopotamia, and indeed the briefest examination of the medical texts reveals numerous references to water, beer, wine, oil, vinegar and urine measured in silas (as, for example AMT 95/3 ii 10'+AMT 50/6: 11'; BAM 549 iv 15//BAM 550 iv 3; BAM 159 v 40; BAM 575 iv 15; BAM 575 ii 10; BAM 391: 11; BAM 579 iv 20; BAM 52: 4 and BAM 471 i 5'[see no. 319a–b]). What is more, “groat water” appears in this and other ghost prescriptions alongside what are clearly types of water, viz. river water, well water, and ditch water (for more examples, see above Part I, Chapter 5). r. 1: The line is restored from KAR 234 r. 8//CT 23.15–22+ iii 21 (see no. 8).

Translation

1. If a person continually sees dead persons, “hand” of Ištar; to keep the dead persons away,⁸ river water, <well water>, “groa[t] water”
 2. (and) ditch water you mix in separately. You fill an ox horn and

- iii 18: ina DÈ GIŠ.Ú.GÍR = “on ašāgu-thorn coals”; for the interpretation of the NE sign as pēnti: “coals” in this context, see W.R. Mayer, OrNS 47.453 ad l. 18. [A] NÍG.ÀR.RA: “groat water”—for a discussion of this ingredient, see above under no. 7. The NÍG.ÀR.RA, clear on the copy, is no longer visible on the tablet.

- iii 28: tum₄-ma-ta₅ at-ta₅: “you are made to swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4. Text B has ^dUTU instead of at-ta₅.

Translation

1. If a person continually sees dead persons, in the la[t]e afternoon you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pure water. A censer (burning) burāšu-juniper
2. on ašāgu-thorn coals you set up before Šamaš. You pour out a libation of beer and then you prostrate yourself. Well water, river water, ditch water, “groat [water]”
3. vinegar <and> hīqu-beer you mix together. You pour it into an ox horn. You scatter ash[es] on (its) surface.
4. The patient lifts it (the horn) in his left hand. He [lifts] a reed torch in his right (hand and) the [o]x ho[rn] in his left and says as follows.

5. “My god, turn to me; my goddess, be relaxed towards me. Let y[ou]r angry heart become calm towards me.
6. Let your spirits be relaxed. Establish well-being for me.”

7. When you have had him say this, you stand before Šamaš and say as follows.

8. “The many dead persons who meet with NN son of NN,¹⁰ <your [servant]>, or a dead person known to him who meets
9. with him—so that¹¹ he may not return and meet with NN <son of NN>, your servant, I will give him this.
10. Let him receive (it) from me and so not return and not meet with NN <son of NN>, your servant.”

11. When you have said this, the liquid which is in the ox horn in the pa[tient’s] hands he pours out. He invokes the name of the dead person.
12. He says as follows: “You are made to swear.” You [lift up] the reed torch [and say as follows: “F]rom this day on, head for (somewhere) else.”

¹⁰ Text A has: “ditto son of ditto.”

Line Commentary

- iii 29: Á NÍG.ÀR.RA: “groat water”—for a discussion of this ingredient, see above under no. 7.
- iii 34: G. Castellino, OrNS 24.264 reads 7 u 7-šu ina SU-*šu-nu-ti*¹, but this seems to make less sense than assuming the šu-nu-ti to be a masc. pl. oblique pronoun. ši-me-t[i]—for the form, see AHW 1253 s.v. šiwītum and CAD Š/3 5a s.v. šimētān. The word is very rare, but seems to fit the traces.
- iii 37: [tum]-*ma-ta*₅: you are [made to sw]ear—for a discussion of this translation and the reasons that it is here preferred to the conventional translation of “conjure”, see Part 1, Chapter 4.

Translation

What seems to be happening here is that the ghosts are being separated from the sickness which they have inflicted by means of the melting(?) of a sickness figurine and the separate burial of figurines representing dead persons.

Translation

 ii 7': G. Castellino, OrNS 24.266–267 translated this line as: “(you) soak. Three times you shall say: ‘May he call it back.’ You shall cry out: ‘May it not go by the street, to its house let it go straightaway.’” This cannot be correct; the end of the line (quite apart from making little sense) is quite clearly the very common expression: “He must not take (to get home) the street he took (to get there). He goes straight home.” Neither is “may he call it back” the obvious translation of lik-ru-ú which would seem to be plural and from karû: “to be short, shrunken”. It is hard to imagine why the patient would wish to “call back” the ghost in any case. The current translation assumes that what is contemplated is that the ghosts who are soaking (with the figurine of the living person) are to shrink like so much mis-washed laundry.

Line Commentary

- ii 18': [SA₅]: the restoration is suggested by ABL 461: 1-3 (see no. 225) which reads—ša-lam LÚ.ÚŠ šá IM TÚG SA₅ ^{TÚG}til-le-e-šú MU₄.MU₄-su: “A representation of the dead person made of clay—you clothe it with a red garment, its tillus.”
- ii 19': du-di-né-tú: “broaches”—see W. Farber, AOS 67.96–98. The word had previously been translated “pectoral” by CAD D 168-170. AHw 1365, s.v. t/dutittu(m) had simply “ein Brustschmuck für Frauen”. A study of the word by H. Klein, ZA 73.255–280, suggests that the term meant “toggle-pin” in the 3rd and 2nd millennia, when this object was in use. See also H. Limet, ARMT 25.275 ad 86.
- ii 21': GIL-a—a feminine plural referent such as “evil omens” is perhaps to be restored in the gap.
- ii 22': šá GID]IM DIB-šu-ma—the šu is clear in the photo and on the tablet.

Line Commentary

ii 32': †kib-ra-ti^I in KAR 234: 3 is based on collation by W. von Soden, ZA 43.271. la GUR-ma la ta-saḫ-ḫur ina MÁŠ.GI₆ KI NENNI A NENNI, etc.—this passage at the beginning of KAR 234: 4 is restored from the parallel K 2781: 1-2. Not having seen this text, G. Castellino, OrNS 24.256 restores an extraneous [GIDIM mu-kil SAG ḪUL-tim] between the ¹*kib-ra-ti*¹ of l. 3 and the KI NENNI A NENNI of l. 4.

- ii 34': KI.GAR/kullatu: “potter’s pit”—see W. Farber, BID 214. ina U₄.4.KÁM GI₆: “on the fourth day, at night”—G. Castellino, OrNS 24.256 ignores the GI₆. tum-ma-tú-nu: “you (pl.) are made to swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4.
- ii 36': NIR-tú—the translation assumes that this is the feminine of an adjective from tarāšu I: “to stretch out”. GIN-an—see R. Borger, Zeichenliste, 108 ad no. 206. The reading GIN for the DU-sign in the meaning kānu is supported by the texts quoted in CAD K 159-60 s.v. kānu A (lexical section).
- ii 39': ú-tam-me-ka: “I have made you swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4. ¹*ina*¹ ra-bi!-šú!—the reading follows G. Castellino, OrNS 24.258-259 against W. von Soden, ZA 43.271 (q[u?]-ra-du[?]).
- ii 40': ta-ta-at-lak—apparently a 2nd sg. Gt perfect from alāku. [UT]U.ŠÚ.A BAD-ḫi—this is clear in the copy of Text B, but now completely missing on the tablet.

Translation

1. If a person [continually sees dead persons], you pour out [flour made from roasted] šigūšu-grain (and) [...]. You make a libation of wat[er]. You say [as follows] befor[e] Š[amaš].
 2. “You must not return and must not make the rounds (anywhere) i[n] the world. You must not return and in a dream with NN, son of NN
 3. you must not mee[t]. By the oath of Anu, Antu, Šamaš (and) the Anunnak[i] gods of heaven and earth
 4. you are made to swear,” [you s]ay. For three days you purify the potter’s pit. On the fourth day, at night, you pinch off clay.
 5. You make a figurine of that ghost. You write its name on its left shoulder. You twist its feet.
 6. You put its [...] down on it. You stick a straight tooth from a dog in its mouth. You set up a reed altar before Šamaš.
 7. You scatter [d]ates and sasqû-flour. You fill laḫannu-vessels—two with water and two with beer, and you set (them) up. A libation,
 8. you pour out before Šamaš. Three times, you say as follows before Šamaš
9. “I have made you swear by Šamaš at his setting. You must be distant from the body of NN son of NN¹⁹; you must depart;
 10. you must go away,” you say and you enclose that figurine in a hole to the west and then
 11. that person, for as long as he lives, will not see a dead person.

Line Commentary

- iii 1: [LÚ.ÚŠ.ME]Š *mu-da-šu la mu-[d]a-šú*¹—the reading follows G. Castellino, OrNS 24.258, supported by such passages as “The dead persons whom I know (and) many dead persons whom I do not know meet with me [for e]vil (purposes)” (CT 23.15–22+ iii 32–33//KAR 234 r. 21–22 [see no. 9]). For the interesting alternative suggestion that the line should be read mu-ša-šu la mu-ša-šu (“night after night” or literally: “in his night, in his non-night”), see W.R. Mayer, OrNS 58.152–153.
- iii 3: In Text B, the ana IGI ^dUTU is now just faint traces on the tablet; NÍG.NA and GAR have also now flaked off.
- iii 4: My reading of KAR 234:18 follows the collation of W. von Soden, ZA 43.271, confirmed by the author. Only faint traces of the -nu-ti of šu-nu-ti are now visible on the tablet.
- iii 5: In Text B, the MEŠ of KI.TA.MEŠ is no longer visible.
- iii 6: The reading of the end of the line follows W. von Soden, ZA 43.271. Much of what was seen or at least portrayed by Text B’s copyist is no longer visible. As currently preserved, gi-lit-tu₄ is gi-li[t-t]u₄; lem-nu is [lem]-nu; and ha-a-at-tu₄ is [ha-a-a]-at-tu₄.

- iii 7: The masculine and feminine “this” presumably refer to male and female figurines.
- iii 7f: nī-iš-k[a] šu-ús-qir-šú-nu-ti ZI.AN.NA HÉ.PÀ ZI.KI.A HÉ.PÀ: “By yo[ur] oath make them swear. By heaven may they swear; by earth may they swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4. In Text B, the -qir-šú, although entirely clear in the copy, is badly effaced on the tablet today. The second PÀ is now P[À].
- iii 11: There is a hole sufficient for another sign (viz. a DIN) at the end of B 26 (coll.).

Translation

1. If a person continual[ly] sees [dead person]s, (either) one who is known to him or not kn[ow]n to him—to keep (them) away, [you ma]ke [figurines of the dead persons].
 2. You [have] th[em] lie down with the patient. On the third day, [in the late aftern]oon,
 3. before Šamaš you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pure water. You set up a reed altar. [You scatter] dates [(and sasqû-flour)]. You set up a censer (burning) burāšû-juniper.
 4. You pour out a libation of beer. You present²⁰ those figurines to Šamaš. You have him say as follows.
5. Recitation: “Šamaš, you are the one who makes the dead persons go aright, (both) those above and those below. Decide my case.²¹
 6. Whether it be jerking or an evil rābišu-demon or a confusional state or shuddering which makes [me] jerk in the night,
 7. this (masc.) is given as my substitute; this (fem.) is given in my stead. By yo[ur] oath
 8. make them swear. By heaven may they swear; by earth may they swear. [May they be loos]ed [from] my body.”
9. He says (this) three times and then you bury those figurines in the shade of an ašāgu-thorn. You mix together flour and sahlû.
 10. You surround them (with it). He enters the house of a tavern keeper and beer to Ea, Šamaš, and Asalluḫi
 11. he pours out. (If) he touches the door and bolt, [he will get well].

²⁰ Literally: “give before”

²¹ Literally: “cause my case to have a decision.”

- r. 13: tal-ta-na—the translation assumes that this is the Gtn present of še³u.

Line Commentary

- i 13': GIŠGAN U₅—this is presumably to be taken as a pseudo-logographic writing for GIŠ*kiškanû*.
 i 14': ki-su—considering that this appears in a list of furniture, it is probably to be interpreted as kīṣu: “his reed mat.”
 i 21': G. Castellino, OrNS 24.244 begins with this line (the beginning of the text is provided by K 2431 as restored from the parallels BAM 230: 28–39 and BAM 546 i 3'–6'). Curiously, although he knew of two of the duplicates (K 2415 and S 1227), Castellino did not incorporate the information contained in them in his transliteration of CT 23.15–18.
 i 22': [šá ina] šuk-lul-ti etc.—the restoration of this phrase is based on BM 128118: 3' which reads [...]-ka šá ina šuk-lul-t[i NAM-šú mi-tu₄]. (BM 128118: 1'–4' roughly parallels CT 23.15–22+ i 21'–22'). This text was called to my attention by M. Roth (based on a personal communication of W.G. Lambert).
 i 24': ZI.AN.NA HÉ.PÀ ZI.KI.A HÉ.PÀ: “by heaven may you swear, by earth may you swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4.
 i 25': BAD-ma—for nesû G-stem with the transitive meaning “to remove”, see CAD N/2.188 s.v. nesû mng. 2.

Translation

1. If ditto, ru' tūtu-sulphur, imbū tâmti, kiškanû, elikulla, (and) bitumen you mix with erēnu-cedar oil.
 2. If you repeatedly smear [the gate] of the house where he (the patient) lives, the door, the bolt, the sides of his bed, his [tab]le (and) his reed mat (with it), he will not see (any more ghosts).
3. [Recitation]: “You, dead person who meets with me, whether you be (my) father, or (my) mother, or (my) brother, or (my) sister, o[r] my [ki]th
 4. or my kin or my relations; whether you be a buried (person’s) ghost or an unburied (person’s) ghost or one who (died) as a result of an offense against a god,
 5. or one who di[ed] as a result of an offense against the king, <or a ghost who has no one to pour water for him>, <when [you] approach my [be]d>, may baltu-thorn hold you back, may ašāgu-thorn
 6. hold you back, may the magic circle hold you back. You, like nearby cl[o]uds, may you not return, may you not ditto ...
 7. behind you di[tto ...]” You pour sweet oil over the baltu-thorn (and) ašāgu-thorn (and) the magic circle.
 8. He²³ recites the recitation seven times. You surround (him) with a magic circle. You must not look behind you.
 9. <[When you have done this], you [have him say as fo]llows.>
10. [Recitation: “Ghos]t who meets with me, whether you be a strange ghost, or a forgotten ghost, or a ro[v]ing ghost who has no one to care for him,
 11. whether you be a ghost who died as a result of a sin against a god or an offense against the king [or a ghost] [who] died [when] his fate was completed—<do not approach, do not come close to my bed>;²⁴ may the wall hold you back,
 12. may the door of my gate turn back your breast at the command of Ea, Šamaš, (and) the āšipu among the gods, Asalluḫi.
 13. By heaven may you swear, by earth may you swear.²⁵ <May it (the oath) never release (you).> When you have sworn,
 14. may Anzagar who looses what is bound remove and turn away your breast. <He has bound (it).>”

²³ See Part I, Chapter 4.

²⁴ There does not appear to be enough room in Text A for this phrase

Line Commentary

i 57': ME!.EN—the text has LÁ.EN.

i 61': A.RI.A is more commonly used to refer to sperm (riḥûtu), but it is attested in lexical lists as an equivalent of the verb reḥû as well (AfO 18.83: 176–177, apud AHw 969a). As the verb reḥû is used to describe sleep (AHw 969b s.v. reḥû mng. 5 a), the active participle seems an appropriate epithet for Mamu,

- the god of dreams. For more on this divinity, see S.A.L. Butler, AOAT 258 73–77.
- i 62': ^dNĒ.ER₁₁ × GAL—according to W.G. Lambert (personal communication), this is the original (Emesal) writing for the name of the god Nergal.
- i 63': In this text, IGI.IGI is usually construed with itti and therefore is presumably to be interpreted as the N-stem or Ntn-stem of amāru both here and in i 68'. For passages in which the verb should probably be interpreted as a Gtn form, see above under CT 23.15–22+ i 30' [no. 3]).
- i 65': At the beginning of the line, G. Castellino, OrNS 24.254 reads Ì GIŠ.ERIN.BAD ZÚ LÚ.GÀL.LU: “oil of šupulḫru, a man’s tooth”. KIRI₄ pu-lu-uk-ki—Castellino reads ZÚ: “tooth”; for “needle”—see AHw 879a s.v. pulukku mng. 1.
- i 68'. G. Castellino, OrNS 24.254 reads U₄.25.KAM, remarking that “reading from the traces not sure”. For the significance of the 29th in connection with ghosts, see J.A. Scurlock, MMDG 31, 104–105, 119.

Line Commentary

- 25: The restoration of the end of the line is based on the very similar passage: ru-ša-am ša SUĦUŠ ^{GIŠ}IG KÁ.GAL ina a-ši-ka šá ana GÛB-ka GUB-zu ŠU.TI (AMT 20/1 i! 21'–22'[also intended for headache]). On the basis of such similarities, M. Stol, JAOS 111.627–628 argues that Ì SUMUN and rūšum are actually equivalent. W. von Soden originally translated rūšum, from context, as “Türsturz” (AHw 997a). Others have seen it as some form of dust or earth (W.L. Moran, Biblica 50.50; also CAD R 432). Whether or not they are actually equivalent, however, the two terms do appear in sufficiently similar contexts to allow for the restoration.

Translation

1. If ditto (a ghost afflicts a person so that he continually has a headache), [you take] used grease from the door of the main gate, [(the one which) stands] on your right when you are going out. [...]
 2. (that) night (and) that day, you twine (it) together into a cord. You wrap (the grease) in a tuft of wool and [you bind it on his temple(s)].

Line Commentary

- 27: SUḪUŠ^{GIŠ} DÌḪ NIGIN-ma ta-na-saḥ—CAD N/II 6b reads KÌLIB.BA for NIGIN-ma and suggests that it means the entire(?) root. The translation given here assumes that wrapping the plant in a cloth is the way in which the not uncommon instruction to pull up a root in such a way that the “sun does not see it” was actually accomplished.

Translation

5. On the fifteenth, the day when Sîn and Šamaš stand together,
 6. you dress that person in sackcloth. You make an incision in his temple with a flint knife and
 7. draw his blood. You have him sit in a reed hut.
 8. You have him face north. To Sîn, towards the setting sun,
 9. you set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper. You make a libation of cow’s milk.³² To Šamaš, (towards) the rising sun, you set up a censer (burning) šurmēnu-cypress.
 10. You pour out a libation of beer.³³ That person says as follows:
11. “To my left is Sîn, moon crescent of the great heavens. To my right is the father of the black headed ones, Šamaš, the judge,
 12. both gods, fathers of the great gods, makers of decisions for the widespread people,
 13. an evil wind has blown upon me and a pursuing ghost continually pursues me.
 14. I am truly grieved, confused and troubled. <I kneel?> for your judgment; save me so that I may not be wronged.”
 15. He says (this) seven times and then he emerges from the reed hut and removes his garment (and) puts on a clean garment. To Sîn, he says as follows:
16. Recitation: “Nanna, light of heaven and earth, rem[ove] the unpleasant sickness from my body.”
 17. He says (this) three times and then, to Šamaš, he sa[ys] as follows:
18. “Utu, great judge, father of the black-headed ones, let the evil wind that put it there(?) go up like smoke to heaven and
 19. let me praise you.” : If he says this three times, it (the ghost) will not [...]

- 43–44: Compare LKA 85: 5, 19–20 (see no. 199).
43: AHw 510b and CAD B 365b translate kurkû as “chicken”; CAD K 563a translates it as “goose”, following B. Landsberger, WO 3.246–260. Since there were chickens in the Near East by the Neo-Assyrian period (see M. Mallowan, Nimrud and its Remains vol. 1: 48–49), either translation is possible.
44: “rind” of the gizzard—see CAD H 132b s.v. ḥaṣbu mng. 4 and CAD Q 251–52 s.v. qilpu mng. 3.

been characterized by attacks of sweating (šumma ... zu`tu kīma lubāṭi im-tanaqqussu: TDP 116: 4, 7, 9) which would be appropriate to someone who had been attacked by chills (l. 5).

- 10: For KI.GAR/kullatu: “potter’s pit,” see W. Farber, BID 214.
- 11–12: Text C lines 1’–2’ are now entirely missing from the tablet.
- 22: The use of TE for the D-stem of teḥû is attested in bilinguals—for references, see AHW 1385a. For a clinical description of UZU.ME.ḤÉ = ḥimṣu, see P.B. Adamson, JRAS 1979.4–5.
- 25: Because the final verb (ÍL) is not written out in Akkadian, there is some question as to whether the exorcist or the patient is supposed to be raising the figurine. KAR 267: 6–9//LKA 85 r. 25–29 (see no. 119) reads: MU-šú ina MAŠ.SÍLA GÛB .../... SAR-ár ana IGI ^dUTU NU šu-a-tu/LÚ.GIG ina GÛB-šú ÍL-ma ... ÉN .../... 3-šú tu-šad-bab-šu-ma ...; BAM 323: 18 (see no. 226) has: LÚ.GIG NU ÍL-ma ana IGI ^dUTU ki-a-am tu-šad-bab-šú. In view of the parallel between these texts and our ll. 17, 25–26, we are probably safe in presuming that it is the patient who was supposed to raise the figurine.
- 28: Alternatively, one could translate: “You have the patient raise his hand and then you have him say as follows”.
- 29ff: The text of the recitation as we have it is somewhat puzzling in places. When, however, the text is rearranged so as to sort the ills which are being complained about with the specific remedy which is proposed for them, most of the difficulties disappear (see below under ll. 32, r. 1ff).
- 30: “teeming”—see CAD A/2.168–69 s.v. apātu.
- 31: For ilu muttallu as an epithet of Marduk, see CAD M/2.307a s.v. muttallu mng. a.
- 32: šá ¹išl-tu U₄-me pa-ni is-bu-su UGU-ya: “who have been angry with me for some time.” The “who” seems to refer to the gods Ea, Šamaš and Marduk (ll. 29–31). However, if this were the case, then the recitation should be asking them to relent, which it does not. On the contrary, these gods are called on to provide help (see r. 11–14) which they could not have been expected to do if they were angry with the patient. Thus, it seems reasonable to suppose that the persons to whom the “who” refers are the god and goddess “who have been angry with me for some time” mentioned in r. 9. Rearranging the text so as to put the angry gods back with the appeal to Ea, Šamaš and Marduk yields ÉN ^dÉ-a MAN ba-nu-u a-me-lu-tu/^dUTU DI.KU₅ muš-te-šir UJN.MEŠ a-pa-a-te/^dAMAR.UTU MAŠ.MAŠ DINGIR.MEŠ DINGIR mu-tál-lu/šá ¹išl-tu U₄-me pa-ni is-bu-su UGU-ya (ll. 29–32) ... (My) god and goddess who have been angry with me for some time; on this day, let them stand before you; let them come to be at peace with me.” This rearrangement has the further advantage of accounting for the singular referents in lines r. 14ff. which can hardly go back to the god and goddess of r. 9–11. With lines 29–32 and r. 7–11 removed, the rest of the text reads ¹šá-ar¹ KA ḪUL i-di-pan-ni MAŠKIM ḪUL¹/šá¹ GAR¹-nam-ma ÚS.ÚS-an-ni/ḫim¹-ḫaṣ muḫ-ḫi a-ta-šak li-šá-ni/pu-r[i¹]-di-ia im-ḫaṣ Á¹¹-a-a/ḫim¹-qut-an-ni-ma i-di-³-pan-ni/[GIDIM] šu-a-tú la i-da-a/ḫa-lam¹-šu ab-ni (r. 1–7) ... ^dÉ-a ep-še-tu-ka/^dUTU up-šá-šu-¹ka¹/ina šip-ti-ka lip-pa-ri-is/(^dÉ-a) qu-ra-du ina DUG₄.GA-ka šir-te/^dUTU DI.KU₅ ina SU.MU us-ḫa-šu-¹ma¹/a-a GUR-ma a-a i-ḫi-¹ta¹-an-ni/ni-iš-k[u]-nu ¹BAL¹-¹su¹ lu ta-me (r. 11–16): “wind from an evil mouth has been blown into me; an evil rābiṣu-demon, which has been set on me so that it continually pursues me, struck the top of my head (so hard that) I bit my tongue; he struck my legs; my arms were (magically) bound; he has fallen on me so that he has knocked me over. That unknown [ghost]–I have made a figurine of him. Ea, (it is) your magic; Šamaš, (it is) your magical practice; let it be kept away by your recitation. (Ea), warrior, by your august command, (and) Šamaš, judge, remove him from my body so that he may not return to cause me confusional states. May he swear by y[o]ur oath to cross over (and be gone).”

- r. 1: Alternatively, one could translate this as: “an evil nose wind has blown into me.” “Wind” from the nose and mouth is attested in other contexts (see AHw 1192–1193a). A third possibility is: “your evil wind,” taken as referring to the ghost.
- r. 5: iddi’panni—perhaps a perfect of a possible by-form of da’āpu: de’ēpu (from which the attested dēpu [AHw 167a] would have been derived).
- r. 6: lā idā—perhaps a negated verbal adjective (and by-form of edû).
- r. 1ff: As it stands, this sentence seems to have agreement problems— the pronoun suffix of l. 12 is singular even though there are ostensibly two subjects (Ea and Šamaš). This problem is probably to be resolved by understanding these lines as an attempt to condense what were originally two similar sentences: Ea epšētūka ina šiptīka lipparis: “Ea, (it is) your magic; let it (the evil wind; see above) be kept away by your recitation” and Šamaš upšašūka ina šiptīka lipparis: “Šamaš, (it is) your magical practice; let it be kept away by your recitation.”
- r. 13: Since the verb in r. 14 and the pronominal suffix in r. 16 are plural, this must be understood to refer to Ea who, alongside Šamaš, is being asked to remove the evil and to act as guarantor of the oath. For Ea qurādu, see AfK 1.22 ii 14, apud CAD Q.313a s.v. qurādu mng. a 3’.
- r. 16: Literally: “let his crossing over be sworn by your oath”. For nabalkutu in this sense, see CAD N/1.12b s.v. nabalkutu mng. 1a. For a discussion of the translation: “swear” instead of the more conventional “conjure” for tamû, see Part 1, Chapter 4.
- r. 17: The scribe seems to have made a mistake here, since it is clear from lines 26 and 28 that it was the patient, and not the exorcist, who was supposed to recite this recitation.
- r. 18: Uš ta-rak—The reading is problematical. Something from rāku: “to pour out” makes good sense but leaves the Uš hanging unless this could be an otherwise unattested Št form.

- r. 20: After this line, text A continues with the colophon: DIŠ NA ina DIB-it

Line Commentary

- 53: DIRI = maḥāḥu: “to soak, soften in a liquid”; for references, see AHw 577b; CAD M/1.49–50. It seems likely that the “SA₅” in the phrase NA₄ ga-bi-i ina ^{GIŠ}GEŠTIN SUR.RA ta-maḥ- ḥa-aḥ-ma IGI KUŠ ina ^{GIŠ}ḪAB nu-ka-rip-pa-ti SA₅-ma (W. Farber, BID p. 59f: 53) is also to be read DIRI = maḥāḥu. ^{GIŠ}ḪAB/hurātu: “madder” (M. Stol, RLA 6.534–535) is a red dye which is used to produce a red color in dying (ṣarāpu—RAcc 4: 24//KAR 60 r. 7). The process by which this is achieved is by soaking the hide in a solution of the dye, a procedure which would be appropriate to the verb maḥāḥu.

Translation

1. If a person’s <head continually stings him, his head (seems to) roar,> his ears ring,
 2. (and) his finger(s) sting him, that person (is afflicted with) affliction by a ghost. <To cure him>,
 3. You soften atā’išu, nuḥurtu, tarmuš, nikiptu, imbû tâmti, (and) elikulla.
 4. You rub him (with it) in oil.

Line Commentary

- 2: AHw 309a and J.M. Seux, Hymnes 419 take hayyattu to mean “spy”. However, with M. Stol, Epilepsy 42–46 note the connection between this noun and the verb LAL/hātu which is used to describe the onset of AN.TA.ŠUB.BA.
- 14: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer.
- 15: The restoration and interpretation of C: 22 follows CAD I 121 s.v. imittu mng. 1b against W. von Soden, ZA 43.270 (i-tab-ba-[ku]).
- 16: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer.
- 17: W. von Soden, ZA 43.269 reads IM (“(soul’s) wind”); J. Bottéro, ZA 73.162 n. 48 reads IM (“clay”). Whichever of the three possible readings is preferred, the meaning remains more or less the same: “He is like me in some essential way.”
- 20: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer.
- 21: Collations courtesy W.R. Mayer. The translation of the beginning of this line is based on CAD D 80b (s.v. damû mng. 2 with discussion) against W. von Soden, ZA 43.269 (“reduced me to tears”).
- 22: Between ÚS.ÚS-an-ni and ina-an-na, text B apparently had an extra line, which is now almost wholly effaced.
- 23: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer. The restoration of E. Ebeling, TuL 139 for the beginning of the line is not supported by the traces.
- 24–25: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer.
- 25: The reading of the end of B: r. 19 follows J.M. Seux, Hymnes 420 against W. von Soden, ZA 43.269.
- 27–29: A very similar appeal is made to Girra in Maqlû II 129–30 and W.G. Lambert, FuB 12.45: 11–17 (Pazuzu). See there for the restorations.

Translation

1. If a ghost afflicts a person, stays continu[ously] in (his) body [and can not be dispelled],
 2. and he continually has confusional states (caused by) a ghost [...]
3. Its ritual: In late afternoon, you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pure water. A censer (burning) burāšu-juniper
 4. you set up. You pour out a libation of beer. You mix clay from a potter’s pit, tallow, (and) wax together and then
 5. you make a figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost. You put an ox horn on it. You give it a human face.
 6. On the left shoulder, its name: “Figurine of the confusional state (causing) ghost (or) evil sickness
 7. which afflicts NN, son of NN,” you write. Towards Šamaš, that figurine
 8. the patient raises to his left and then to his right he ties a knot. The recitation: “Šamaš, this (is)
 9. the representation of the confusional state (causing ghost)” you have him say

- three times and then you put it (the figurine) in a burzigallu-vessel.
10. You raise a reed torch and then the recitation: “Girra you are mighty, you are furious”
11. you have him recite three times. You untie the knot before him. You prostrate yourself and then you throw the burnt material into waste land and he will get well.
12. Recitation: “Šamaš, this is the representation of the confusional state (causing) ghost; this is the representation of anything evil
13. which exists in my body, my flesh, and my muscles, (which) presses my temples,⁵¹
14. continually makes my face seem to spin, dries up my palate, numbs my flesh,
15. divides⁵² the right side and the left side of my body, goes continually after me,
16. (and) <continually> sets about cutting my throat—Šamaš, in your presence, have I sought him out

18. I have mixed⁵³ clay from the pure mountains, <tallow> (and) wax.
19. I have made⁵⁴ a representation of him. Šamaš, because he sought me out,⁵⁵ looked for me; (because) during the evening,
20. midnight, and dawn watch, <daily, night and day> he caused me confusional states,
21. made me twist, immobilized me, and made me sick; night and day
22. he is set on me so that he continually pursues me. Now, in the presence of your great godship
23. I ... day and night. May he not return to cause me confusional states.
24. Šamaš, <on this day> saving is established before you. Ea and Asalluḫi
25. sent me to you. I came for (you) to give (me) life.⁵⁶
26. Give me my life. Pronounce my soul’s life.”⁵⁷
- <“Recitation to remove confusional states (caused by) a ghost.”>
27. Recitation: “Girra, you are mighty, you are furious.
28. [You make] gods and malku-demons [go aright]. You decide the case of the wronged man and woman.
29. Stand forth [at my case] and, like the hero Šamaš, [set]tle my case; make a decision about me.
30. Remove [the evil ghost] from my body so that I may praise your great godship.”

Line Commentary

- 33: For the interpretation of the NE sign as DÈ/pēnti: “coals” in this context, see W.R. Mayer, OrNS 47.453 ad l. 18; cf. CAD A/2 409–10 s.v. ašāgu mng. b 2’.
- 34: The restoration GAR-an is based on KAR 234 r. 4 (see no. 8), but DUB-aq (as in KAR 56 r. 2–3 [see no. 179]) is also possible. To use a censer, one put charcoal in it, lit the charcoal, scattered the aromatics over the burning charcoal, and then put the censer where it was needed. Ghost rituals omit the first two steps, instructing the practitioner to scatter the aromatic over coals of a certain description or to set up an apparatus in which an aromatic is burned over specified coals.
- 35: qa: “thread”—the long final vowel is usually expressed, but not always. See, for example, W.G. Lambert, BWL 156 (IM 53975 r. 5) and Livingstone, Fs Deller 176: 6.
- 37–38: The restoration of the end of the line is based on the fact that the bīnu-tamarisk and maštaka seem to be appealed to in r. 20–21 to help get rid of the ghost. It would therefore be appropriate if these two items were put into contact with the figurine of the ghost in some way. The presence of the bīnu-tamarisk, and the fact that something is being made to stand at or on top of something else is, in any case, clear from the preserved parts of the line.
- r. 1–2: For these lines, see J.M. Seux, Hymnes 416. For the restoration, see E. Ebeling, TuL 140.
- r. 4: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer.
- r. 7: See von W. von Soden, ZA 43.269.
- r. 8: Text A uses a form of šudduru “to twitch” rather than the expected form of šādu (as in Text B).
- r. 13: For idugallu as an epithet of Nedu, see W. Farber, ZA 66.261–275.
- r. 14: GIŠ.SI.GAR nam-za-qí-šú-nu—for the various technical terms for parts of the locking mechanism of a door, see A. Fuchs, SAAS 8.97–107.

Translation

1. [If a ghost] afflicts [a person] and can not be dispelled from his body, at sunset you sweep the ground. You sprinkle pu[re] water.
2. You set up a reed altar [before Šamaš]. You put portions of two bread(s) each made from isqūqu-flour on it.
3. You scatter [dates] (and) sasqû-flour. A censer (burning) burāšu-juniper on ašāgu-thorn charcoal
4. [you set up]. You set up a [pursi]tu-vessel. You fill two laḥannu-vessels, one with water and one with beer, and set (them) up.
5. [You pinch off clay] (and) make a figurine. [You tie] a thread of gold to [its] nose.
6. [...]

7. [...] You tie its [hands] in back. Bīnu-tamarisk and [maštaka]
8. [you put out]. You make [the figurine] stand [on i]t. He⁵⁸ says as follows:
9. “[The ... of the] widespread [heavens(?)], light of the Netherworld–Šamaš the judge;
10. mighty [lord, Ea, one in whom] Eridu [tr]usts; sagest in the universe, Marduk, the powerful,
11. [lor]d of the Eengurra; Ea, Šamaš, (and) Marduk–help me so that
12. I may prosper with your assent. Šamaš,⁵⁹ the frightening ghost
13. who has been fastened to my back for many days and 14. cannot be dispelled, (which) continually pursues me all day, frightens me continually by night,⁶⁰
15. continually sets about pursuing me, <continually> stands the hair of my head on end,
16. presses my temple, continually makes my face seem to spin, dries up my palate, <numbs my flesh, (and) dries up my whole body> –
17. whether it be the ghost of my kith and kin, or the ghost of one who was killed in a military defeat,
18. or a roving ghost–this is he; this is a representation of him. <Šamaš, in your presence have I sought him out and garments for him to clothe himself with, shoes for his feet>,
19. a girdle for his waist, a waterskin (filled with) water for him to drink
20. (and) malt flour have I assigned him. <I have given him travel provisions.>
May he go to where the sun sets.
21. May he be entrusted to Bidu, great doorkeeper of the Netherworld; <may Bidu, great doorkeeper of the Netherworld, strengthen the watch over him>;
22. may he (Bidu) seize the bar to which they have the key. Šamaš, at your command⁶¹ (and) at the command
23. of the sagest of the gods, Marduk, drive him away from my body, 24. separate him [from] my [bo]dy, carry him away from my body. Let him be put under your oath;
25. let him be put under the oath of Ea and Asalluḫi. <Let him be put under [the oath of the go]ds [of heaven and earth].>⁶² Let him not come near me; let him not come close to me;
26. [let him not approach me]; let him not reach me. May he cross the river. May he go across the mountain.
27. [May he withdraw 3,600 double] hours’ distance from my body; may he go up like smoke to heaven.
28. [Like an] uprooted [bīnu-tama]risk may he not return to his place. May the bīnu-tamarisk purify [me].

⁵⁸ See Part I, Chapter 4.

⁵⁹ Text A has “a figurine of” instead of “Šamaš”.

⁶⁰ Text B has “all night.”

⁶¹ Text B has “Šamaš, at your august command which cannot be altered, in the evil of the eclipse of the moon which took place in such-and-such a month (on) such-and-such a day, the evil of signs (and of) evil (and) unfavorable omens which have come about in palace and my land.”

⁶² At this point, text B breaks off.

29. [May the maštakal re]lease me. May the earth receive (him) from me; may it give me its divine radiance and [car]ry off my sickness.
30. [Ea, Šamaš], and Marduk, help me and
31. carry off the [sick]ness of my body so that those who see me may praise you.
32. Remove the sickness of my body; I have turned to you—give me life.

Line Commentary

- 2–3: It seems odd that the patient should be supposed to wash himself at this point, especially since he takes no further part in the ritual. Perhaps the i is a mistake for ta. On this point, see also E. Ebeling, TuL 76 n. b.
- 3: See B. Landsberger, Datepalm 18–19.
- 4: Judging from the fact that the figurine is later ritually divorced, given travel provisions, and made to swear to be “loosed” and “removed,” it is unlikely to have represented the patient. Representations of sickness are to be found in other ghost spells—note CT 23.15–22 i 48’//KAR 21: 15 (see no. 10) and KAR 267: 6–7//LKA 85 r. 25–26//AMT 97/1+: 41 (see no. 119); note also LÚ.GIG written for GIG in BAM 323: 31//Gray, Šamaš, pl. 12 (K 2132): 12’ (see no. 226). For ṯiṯ kullati, see W. Farber, BID 214.
- 5–6: For šiddu and kirissu, see W. Farber, Fs. Reiner 96–100.
- 11: For the enigmatic ŠA SI SI, Ebeling suggests a translation “shining”. See TuL 77 n. a.
- 16: E. Ebeling, TuL 77 n. c suggests interpreting LÚ.A.RÁ as the patient (“the - restless man”).

- 18: For another example of the hem of a figurine of sickness being cut off as part of the ritual, see KAR 66: 19 (apud CAD S 322a s.v. sissiktu mng. a 2’).
- 19: NINDA ab-la: dried bread—so W. von Soden, ZA 43.276. For other references in ritual texts, see CAD A/1.54b s.v. ablu mng. b 2’; cf. J. Bottéro, ZA 73.191.
- 21: tu-tam-ma-šú: “you make it swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4. The end of the line apparently has GAR-an which usually refers to the placing of objects for the ritual. Is this simply an instruction to put the figurine down and, if so, where was one supposed to put it?
- 22: ú-tam-me-ka: “I have made you swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4; cf. also r. 6, 7, 11, 12.
- 23–25: On the significance of these divinities, see J. Bottéro, ZA 73.199.
- 24: For a discussion of lahmu, see W. Heimpel, Fs. Römer 129–149, S. Macgregor, Fs. Römer, pp. 150–156; F.A.M. Wiggermann, JEOL 27.90–105 and F.A.M. Wiggermann, Figures 286–288.
- r. 1: This seems preferable to Ebeling’s “bei dem ..., der Nacht auf den Tag sich ergiessen lässt” (TuL 78).
- r. 8: ^d*Urgat*. E. Ebeling, TuL 78 n. a, thought that this might be the same as ^d*Urkittu* (i.e. Ištar of Uruk—see AHw 1431b). šiltāhu (arrow) appears as an epithet of the war god Ninurta (AHw 1237a), and thus would not be out of place in connection with Ištar. The rest of the phrase, however, continues to defy translation.
- r. 9: aḫātu: “sister”? Properly speaking, Ištar should be the moon god’s daughter, not his sister.
- r. 10: šaḫḫu: “meek” comes to mind, but is attested only as a royal title. The translation of the end of the line follows AHw 308b s.v. ḫaḫḫu II.
- r. 11: For other references to Mount Ebiḫ, “bolt of the lands”, see CAD S 258a s.v. sikkūru mng. 1e.
- r. 13: E. Ebeling, TuL 78 read the beginning of the line qab-ru: “buried”.

Translation

1. If a ghost afflicts a person (so that) his ears roar,
2. you purify yourself on a favorable day; he (the patient) bathes in well water.
3. You go to the steppe; you sweep the ground with a palm frond.
4. You make a figurine of the sickness out of clay from a potter’s pit; with a makeshift garment
5. you clothe it. In groups of seven and seven, you put out a food portion for it. A spindle, carpeting,
6. (and) a pin you tie at its head.
7. You set up a reed altar before Šamaš. Dates
8. (and) sasqū-flour you pour out. You set up a censer (burning) burāšu-juniper.
9. You set up an adagurru-vessel. You put that figurine before Šamaš.
10. You say as follows:

11. “Recitation: Father Enki [...], father Enki who reveals
 12. the spell of Asalluhi, son of Eridu.
 13. Asalluhi has seen it.
 14. Because of it, the difficulty, because of it,
 15. the seizer of heaven and earth, who gives birth to existing things,
 16. makes (its) path distant (from) the person.”⁶³
17. You recite this recitation three times over (it);
 18. you cut off its hem. Provisions (consisting of) groats,
 19. malt, beer bread, (and) dried bread you provide it.
 20. You take that figurine and
 21. bind it to a bīnu-tamarisk and you make it swear. [...]
22. Recitation: “(By) the lord of gods have I made you swear,
 23. (by) Duri (and) Dari,
 24. (by) Laḥmu (and) Laḥamu,
 25. (by) Alala (and) Belili,
 26. (by) shade, (by) daylight, (by) magic heaps of flour,
 27. (by) blazing Girra,
 28. (by) pure Nusku,
 29. (by) Sîn, lord of the crown,
 30. (by) Šamaš, judge of truth,
 31. I have made you swear by catch water and wadi;
 32. by mountains (and) rivers, are you made to swear.
 33. (By) [...],
 34. (by) [...] of the torch of the luminary, Sîn [...],
 35. (by) Šakkan ... desirous of plum trees(?),
 36. (by) Ebiḥ, bolt of the lands, are you made to swear.
 37. (By) the lord of gods have I made you swear.
 38. May you be loosed; may you be (physically) removed; may you be (physically) removed.”

Line Commentary

- ii 9–12: This recitation is also used in BAM 506: 19'–21' (see no. 156).
 ii 12,14 The join between K2422++ and K13329+K13420 (the left two pieces drawn in BAM 5 pl. 109) is not the direct join shown by Köcher, but an indirect join with space for three or more signs in the gap (coll.)

Translation

- The recitation: “(Since) you truly know, since you are truly good,
 - [her]o Ninur[ta], since you are truly good,
 - [lord] Ninurta, since you are truly good,
 - [king] Ninurta, may they (the ghosts) never approach”: spell (and) recitation.
- [One] recitation (for cases) where a person’s ears r[o]ar.
- [It]s [ritual]: ešmekku-stone, myrrh, (and) urnû. You grind (them) toget[he]r. You mix (it) with erēnu-cedar resin.
 - You recite [the recitation three times] over (it). You wrap (it) in a tuft of wool. You put (it) into his ears.

Line Commentary

- 11': This recitation is also used in BAM 506: 24'–25' (see no. 156). This is one of a number of recitations which read as if they had been translated from poorly understood Sumerian (see above Part I, Chapter 4).
- 12': ku-un-niš-ta: The reading was suggested in F. Köcher, BAM V, p. xxxv. Tablet and copy look more like ku-lut-ta.

Translation

1. [Recitation]: “The ... is bored through. (The time) has approached for him; push it away”. Recitation for (cases where) his ears (have) an obstruction (in the canal).
2. Its [ritu]al: you twist a strand to your left. (Passing) finger over [top of] finger(?), you tie a knot (in it).
3. You put (it) into his ears [using] a bronze toggle pin. Rec[itation for (cases where) h]is [ears (have)] an obstruction (and) they roar.

Line Commentary

- iii 6'-20': For this type of recitation, see R.D. Biggs, ŠÀ.ZI.GA 24; A. Falkenstein, Haupttypen 4ff.
- iii 8': The translation assumes that LA is to be taken as writing for LÁ. For awātu tarāšu, see AHw 1326b s.v. tarāšu mng. 8b. Cf. R. Campbell Thompson, AJSL 47.21.
- iii 12': The reading of the Sumerian and the translation of this line follow Šurpu V/VI 25-26.
- iii 19': Note the use of LÚ for LU/DIB in BAM 484: 2'.
- iii 20': ZI.AN.NA HÉ.PÀ [Z]I.KI.A HÉ.PÀ: "By heaven may you swear; [b]y earth may you swear"—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4.
- iii 22'-24' It is interesting to compare this text with CT 23.5-14 iii 23-25, which is directed against sagallu. Line Commentary

- 4: For the translation, see CAD Z 4 s.v. zabālu mng. 4a. This was presumably a warning to the āšipu not to delay. If the ritual was properly performed, r. 32 predicts that the patient will recover.
- 5: AHw 510b and CAD B 365b translate kurkû as “chicken”; CAD K 563a translates it as “goose”, following B. Landsberger, WO 3.246–260. Since there were chickens in the Near East by the Neo-Assyrian period (see M. Mallowan, Nimrud and its Remains vol. 1: 48–49), either translation is possible. It is interesting to note that caged chickens/geese were also slaughtered as part of the treatment for ghost-induced headaches as, for example, in BAM 9: 43//AMT 102/1: i 3//BAM 483 ii 7'//BAM 216: 37'// Jastrow r. 31 (see no. 113).

- 6: This text is peculiar in its use of the locative adverbial um plus ma with the infinitive apparently as a means of designating (as in ll. 6–8 and 22–25) simultaneous action by a single person or (as in ll. 12–14 and 16–18) cooperative action by two persons working as a team.
- 15: Collations here and in l. 20 are courtesy M. Geller.
- 19: “rind” of the gizzard—see CAD H 132b s.v. ḥaṣbu mng. 4 and CAD Q 251–52 s.v. qilpu mng. 3.
- 20: E.RI.A—this is perhaps a mistake for ina A.RI.A.

Translation

1. If a person’s face seems to spin (and) he says: “Oh, my insides!,”
 2. his insides rumble,
 3. his epigastrium continually protrudes (and) he loses his appetite for bread and beer.
 4. Before he lingers and dies,
 5. you slaughter a caged chicken/goose over his heart.
 6. While tearing out the heart of the chicken/goose and
 7. putting it over his heart, the āšipu lays¹⁰⁰ his hands
 8. on him (the patient) and says as follows:
9. Recitation: “Remove the evil ghost; remove the evil ghost
 10. so that it does not approach the person’s body.
 11. May it (the heart) chase away whatever is evil for him (the patient).”
12. He says (this) seven times and while he removes the bird’s heart
 13. and lays it on the ground,
 14. a woman who is past childbearing age picks (it) up and (does so) without looking behind her.
 15. The āšipu says: “It is time for the opener to come” behind her.
16. He says (it) seven times and while he places the heart in a hole on the east (side),
 17. she closes its (the hole’s) opening with dough made from šigūšu-flour and (does so)
 18. without looking behind her.
 19. The blood of that chicken/goose, the “rind” of the gizzard,
 20. and its fat, he cooks. He mixes (it) with “human semen” and
 21. rubs it onto his heart.
 22. While taking the blood of that chicken/goose, ¹⁰⁰ This is actually in line B in the Akkadian.

23. he mixes it with šigūšu-flour and then, while mixing¹⁰¹ earth from the Ištar temple
24. and magnetite together,

Line Commentary

- 1: The restoration of the end of the line follows W. von Soden, ZA 43.267.
2: tu-red-di The reading and interpretation follow R.I. Caplice, OrNS 39.141 no. 41: 4 and I. Finkel, AfO 29/30.12: 20 against A. Tsukimoto's tu-šed-di (kispum 170–171) and E. Ebeling's terrub šid-di (TuL 144, followed by J. Bottéro, ZA 73.185 who takes this as a reference to a part of the house [^{à la lettre}: le 'côté long', šiddu]) in which rites for the dead were to be performed). The restoration of KI at the end of the line was suggested by R.I. Caplice, OrNS 40.150: 27'; for zakāru by itself in the meaning of "invoke" in the context of ghosts, see also KAR 227 iii 28//LKA 89 r. rt. col. 20.
3: For the end of the line, W. von Soden, ZA 43.267 suggests GAR.GA[R]?.
4–5: The restoration of the end of line 4 was suggested by F. Thureau-Dangin, RA 18.163 r. 26 (apud CAD K 609b s.v. kutimmu mng. d) where earrings and other jewelry obtained from smiths are offered to Lamaštu. For the presentation of silver to Šamaš, see also KAR 66: 14 which reads–KÙ.BABBAR ana IGI ^dUTU GAR-an: "You set out silver before Šamaš."
5: At the end of the line, A. Tsukimoto, kispum 170–171 suggests a reading NÍG.BA.
6: For the end of the line, W. von Soden, ZA 43.267 suggests: šá tu?-ka?-[lu? kib?]-ra?-a-ta. As A. Tsukimoto, kispum 172 has already noted, there does not seem to be enough room on the tablet to accommodate this restoration.
11: The reading of the end of the line follows W. von Soden, ZA 43.267, AHw 336b, and CAD H 152a against B. Landsberger, WO 3.59 (iḥ-ta-na-aṭ!-[xx]). See also J.M. Seux, Hymnes 421.
12: The reading of the beginning of the line follows CAD H 152a against W. von Soden, ZA 43.267 (i'?-il?-an-ni). See also J.M. Seux, Hymnes 421. For kuššudu in the sense of "to make prisoner, to seize," see CAD K 281b s.v. kašādu mng. 5d.
13: DU₈-ar. This expression is translated "weichen, weggehen" in AHw 851, but it is listed under the N-stem of paṭāru.

- 14: J.M. Seux, Hymnes 421 takes the flesh as subject.
 15: J.M. Seux, Hymnes 421 restores an N-stem form.
 16: it-te-né-eh-pu-u. This looks like an Ntn form of hepû but, in addition to the fact that this form is rarely attested, “they are continually smashed” does not seem to make sense in this context.
 18–19: Restorations are based on W. von Soden, ZA 43.268. See also J.M. Seux, Hymnes 421.
 19: For taklimtu, see J.A. Scurlock, NABU 1991 no. 3.
 20: See W. von Soden, ZA 43.268.
 22: The beginning of the line is difficult. E. Ebeling, TuL 145 suggests emending it to A.EDIN!.LAL!: mê nādi (water from a waterskin).
 27: My reading of the end of the line follows W. von Soden, ZA 43.268 and AHw 346a rather than B. Landsberger, WO 3.54 (hi-mi-i[t še]-ti).
 28–9: See W. von Soden, ZA 43.268.
 32: The restoration is that suggested by J.M. Seux, Hymnes 242.
 r. 3, 12: The restorations follow W. von Soden, ZA 43.268.

Line Commentary

- 40: See CAD M/1.70a s.v. maḥāru mng. 10e. The ʽ-šúʽ¹ copied by Köcher at the end of the line is dubious on the original.
- 42: MU-šú SAR- are drawn as entirely preserved by Köcher, but today all that can be seen on the tablet is [...SA]R-.
- 44: The restoration of the beginning of the line is tentative, but note the association of goat hair with ghosts in TDP 4: 38.
- 45: Restored after SpTU 3.82 iv 17 (see W.R. Mayer, OrNS 60.111).
- 48: See CAD A/2.324 s.v. arūtu.
- 50: The sukkallu of Eridu is presumably the same as the sukkallu of Enki. For the name of Enki's sukkallu, see RLA V 179 s.v. Isimu.
- 51: “foremost”—see CAD M/1.108a s.v. maḥrû and M/2.177b s.v. muḥrû. Since the adjective is feminine, it presumably refers to a goddess who serves as (female) herald, which is why I have restored a SAL sign.
- 55: Readings are based on collation of the original tablet.
- 61: ina U₄.3.KÁM U₄-mi is presumably a writing for ina šalši ūmi. The verb has apparently suffered a metathesis of syllables—see already E. Ebeling, TuL 83.

Line Commentary

- 1: The restoration of the assailants is based on the names of the figurines as given in lines 10–13.
- 2: The restorations are based on similar contexts in other ghost spells. See, for example, KAR 267: 3, 31 (see nos. 118–119).
- 3: 4 ŠUK.MEŠ ZĪ.KUM tara-kas—the portions of bread were literally tied together; see S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 40.50–51 with illustration on p. 58. Collations in this line and in lines 27, 34 and 44 are courtesy of M. Geller.
- 5: [šid-di] GĪD-ad—the original suggestion of F. Thureau-Dangin, which is still accepted in AHw 1230b, 1121a, CAD Š/1.22 and CAD Š/2.407–408 is that this phrase refers to the drawing of a curtain. S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 55–56 suggests that the šiddu of these occasional offerings (typically performed out in the open) was not a curtain but a line of flour, etc. used to sequester the offerings. Problematical for Maul’s interpretation are passages in which the šiddu which is being drawn in the course of the ritual is said to be made of linen (as for example in C.B.F. Walker and M.B. Dick, “The Mesopotamian mīs pī Ritual” 78: 38; 90: 110) or is described in the same breath with what can only be a curtain: “You draw a šiddu before the gate of the passageway ... you draw a red cloth before the gate of the courtyard” (C.B.F. Walker and M.B. Dick, “The Mesopotamian mīs pī Ritual” 112: 14–15). In favor of Maul’s interpretation is the fact that the verb šadādu is used in other contexts to describe drawing lines (CAD Š/1.28b). It should be noted, however, that the lines in question are straight, not circular, and that the passage in SpTU 2 no. 20: 29’ which Maul cites (p. 56) and which reads GĪD.DA DUB-aq also implies a straight rather than circular line. With J. Tropper, Nekromantie 94 n. 219, the GĪD.DA of this passage is indeed to be read šiddu. It is, however, specifically šiddu “long side of a piece of immovable property” (CAD Š/2 403–407) as the following section which instructs (r. 3): SAG.KI (pūta) ... DU[B-aq] shows (see J. Tropper, Nekromantie 95 n. 222). A reconciliation is perhaps possible if you suppose that the šiddu was a curtain (or where this was impractical a line of flour symbolizing a curtain) drawn in a particular way (“along the long side”) so as to isolate gods, their statues, or their offerings from unwanted visitors. Thus, assuming Maul’s idea to be generally correct, his drawings of the offering arrangements (pp. 59, 70) should not show the šiddu of flour (nos. 12, 6) as a sort of lopsided circle round the offerings (this would in any case have been described as a zisurrū) but as a more or less straight line running parallel to them along the long side (and separating the offerings and the performers of the ritual from the steppe etc. beyond). Compare the arrangement of curtains in C.B.F. Walker and M.B. Dick, “The Mesopotamian mīs pī Ritual” 108: 34–38; 110: 45–46.

- 6: A. Tsukimoto, kispum 151 suggests restoring sér-qa at the beginning of the line.
- 7: tu-mé-ša—apparently from muššû: “to spread out.” This verb is occasionally attested with an e-vocalization—note Old Babylonian ú-we-eš-šú-ú (RA 53.36 a 14!, apud AHw 1498 s.v. (w)uššû(m) mng. 1a).
- 26: The interpretation of this line follows what has become an accepted emendation—see J.M. Seux, Hymnes 424 w/ n. 4. Collation by M. Geller confirms that the TA is not on the tablet.
- 27: Reading and translation follow AHw 1511b.
- 31: Collation by M. Geller indicates a reading of tu-na-mar instead of tu-gam-mar.
- 32: Reading and interpretation follow AHw 1455b. The text, according to collation by M. Geller, has tu-wa-ta-da.
- 34: The translation of the beginning of the line follows CAD N/1.294a s.v. napharu mng. 2a.
- 42: The emendation follows J.M. Seux, Hymnes 425 w/ n. 16. Collation by M. Geller confirms that the second gûl is not on the tablet.
- 43: pa-su-ma—from pasû; the reading and interpretation follow AHw 839b.
- 44: The reading of the end of the line is based on similar passages in other ghost spells. See, for example, BAM 323: 29–30 (see no. 226); KAR 267: 21//LKA 85 r. 12//AMT 97/1+: 29 (see no. 119).

Line Commentary

- 58–59: For the interpretation of sennarbutu and tārītu and a very helpful reconstructed drawing of this figurine, see D. Schwemer, THeth 23.65, 119–120.
- 58: li-ta[š-š]i—although this form is not otherwise attested, the best sense can be made of this form by assuming it to be the Ntn of našû with the specific meaning: “to be collected”. W. Farber, ZA 91.257 suggests emending these signs to yield a more conventional te!-[le]q-[q]é: “you [ta]ke”.
- 59: pa-ni GAR-an-ši—with D. Schwemer, THeth 23.120, this is a more likely reading than taking the ši with the following pa-a. This goes against the division of words on the tablet, but note line Text B ii 15’ which is spaced as if the text were to be read ú-ra-te eš-ši-ir and ii 18’ which is spaced tu-ur-re-e-tu a-ba-ba ar-ši. For the expression, compare IGI LÚ GAR-an-šú: “You give (the figurine) a human face” (KAR 267: 5 // LKA 85 r. 24 = no. 119: 5). The reference would appear from context to be to adding eyes and perhaps a nose to the figurine. pa-a SIG₇ ù ša-pa-ti—Farber, ZA 91:257 suggests reading the preceding ši as IGI and interpreting the resulting phrase as : “eye, mouth, eyebrow (šur^u), and lips”. But should not the “eye” and the “eyebrow” be plural rather than singular in this context?
- 60: šá iš^l-[k]u-ri ta-ba-an-ni—for the reading, see W. Farber, ZA 91:257. The use of the verb banû as opposed to the ešēru of line 63’ may imply that the mouth and lips were three dimensional.
- 61: [a-ḥu a-na] a-ḥi—note that a single twig seems to be used for both arms, which would seem to indicate that the hole into which the twig is “made to enter” passed all the way through the figurine.
- 62: ša-qí-šaq úr-še-e—the reading is problematical since Text B diverges. The first word appears to be a reduplicated form (paspas [GAG § 57]) with a helping vowel added (compare zeruzeru; see below). If related to šaqû, šaq(i)šaqu would literally mean something like “way high” and could conceivably be some form of hoisting device (compare mulmullu: “arrow” from mullû: “to nock a bow”). This would be a not inappropriate comparison to the little figurine with its splayed arms (compare the drawing in D. Schwemer, THeth 23.65). Presuming that Text A is correct, the second word is possibly the plural of (h)uršû: “storeroom”. In this case, the device in question would have been a hoist used to get heavy sacks of grain and other valuables into upper level storerooms.

- 64–65: The interpretation of these lines follows D. Schwemer, THeth 23.102–103. Since, however, he does not justify his translation, a few comments seem in order. ta-ḥa-am-miš-ma—see AHw 315–316 (ḥamāšū I: “abknicken”); te₉-še-er-ri and še-ru-ú—see AHw 1220a (šerû II: “etwa flach hinlegen”). Lexical equations with sapānu and the use of the term to refer to the replacement of roof beams indicate that installation on the level was what was contemplated. Without this precaution, the hair which was wrapped round the twig would have ended up looking lopsided and would have spoiled the appearance of the figurine.
- 66–67: Readings and interpretation follow W. Farber, ZA 91.258.
- 70: Readings and interpretation follow W. Farber, ZA 91.258–259.
- 71–78: Emendations, restorations, and readings follow W. Farber, ZA 91.259–260.
- 73: ik-ka-lu—the reading has been confirmed by collation by R.D. Biggs (W. Farber, ZA 91.259). ú-taḥ-ḥa-ši-im-ma (cf. 75’; 77’)—since the figurine does not visibly eat or drink at the communal meal, its share of food and beer is simply placed before it; compare (with gods) UZU.ZAG UZU.ME.ḪÉ UZU.KA.NE tu-taḥ-ḥa: “You bring the shoulder, caul fat (and) roasted meat near” (LKA 88: 22//LKA 87 r. 6//LKA 86: 11’= no. 115: 22).
- 78: For the interpretation of this line, see D. Schwemer, THeth 23.121–122. Schwemer’s reading of the end of the line has been confirmed by collation by R.D. Biggs (W. Farber, ZA 91:260).
- 79: pi-ša-an ¹*e*¹-er-ši—literally “box of the bed”; presumably the frame without the bedding. For illustrations of ancient Mesopotamian beds (which resemble those still in use in Yemen), see A. Salonen, Möbel 109.
- 80: *SIG*₅ = našpu—for references, see CAD N 78.
- 82: nu-du-un-na-a na-ad-na-ki—D. Schwemer, THeth 23.92 emends the line to read nu-du-un-na- a-na-ad-<di>-na-ki. The dowry in question has, however, already been given (line 79’). The spacing of the signs on the tablet puts the a with the na-ad-na-ki, but note the sign separations of ú-taḥ-ḥa-aš-ši-im-ma which appears three times (Text A ii 23, 25, 27), never with the same sign spacing but twice with the ú attached to the preceding word and completely separated from the rest of the verb.
- 83: z[e?]-¹e!¹?-er-[z]é-er—this appears in status absolutus, which suggests that the figurine is being addressed (GAG § 62j). If so, this may be translated: “Little dwarf”, a not inappropriate designation for a miniature person. It must be admitted that the traces of the heads of two verticals seen by Wilhelm do not fit an ¹*e*¹, but since these were not seen by Güterbock (KBo 14.53 rt. col. 2), they are at best very indistinct and possibly illusory.
- 84: lem-n[u ḥa-a-a-ḫ]u₄—the restoration follows W. Farber, ZA 64.90.
- 85: ṽmu-ut¹-ki šu—as is common also in later scholarly texts, whether the horizontal lines of the sign are drawn all the way through or stop at the end of the sign (as in the DI and KI of A ii 26 seen clearly in the photograph in D. Schwemer, THeth 23 pl. 2) is a better indicator of the distinction between DI and KI than the actual number of horizontal lines in the sign.
- 86: i-n[a Z]U NENNI DUMU NENNI—the reading follows Farber, ZA 91:261.
- 87: n[a-a]d-di-ṽraš¹l-[š]i—N stem imperative of nadāru (see CAD N/1.59–61; AHw 703). The n[a-a]d reading follows D. Schwemer, THeth 23.93. Güterbock's copy, KBo 14.53 rt. col. 6, shows part of the first winkelhacken of the na, and so strengthens the reading. Schwemer reads the 4th sign as nu, but admits that the resulting form is "anscheinend fehlerhaft" (p. 123) and omits this line from his translation (p. 104). As can be seen from Wilhelm's copy and confirmed by Güterbock's copy, Schwemer's photograph and the dig photograph 58/29 (courtesy H.G. Güterbock), the horizontal is too high for a nu. Güterbock's copy also shows a second lower horizontal with a second wedge partway across—all the major parts of a raš. On Wilhelm's copy, the second upper wedge looks particularly like the head of one of the diagonals of a raš. The reading [š]i follows Schwemer, backed especially by Wilhelm's copy but also by Güterbock's earlier (unpublished) field copy.

- 88: t[e?-si-i]h?-ši-ma—assuming that Schwemer's restoration is correct, this will be from ešēhu: "to assign" and not ezēhu: "to gird".
- 89–92: To this section of the ritual compare: ana bi-ʾ-e šá BÀD KU₄-šú-nu-ti ana e-reb^dUTU-[š]i IGI.MEŠ-šú-nu GAR-an bi-ʾ-a te₉-[pe-e_h-hi(?)]^úNAGA.SI pa-ʾ-ša-ti GIN₇ [ZÌ].DUB.BUB-bu ana bi-ʾ-e ŠUB.ŠUB-d[i] (KAR 92 obv. 23–26 [see CAD B 297]).
- 91: [ta]-ap-pal (cf. 73)—if correctly restored, the presence of this Assyrian technical term would help to support the arguments presented in D. Schwemer, THeth 23.8–52 for an "Assyro-Mittanian" origin for this and other texts found at Hattuša.
- 92: [tu-b]al-lal-ma—see the photograph (D. Schwemer, THeth 23 pl. 3); for the writing, compare KUB 4.48 iii 9.
- 93: šú-up-pa-t[ù] šiddi: "curtain tassels(?)"—the translation assumes that this is AHw 1112b šuppatu II = CAD Š suppu C: "strip of carded wool" (based on the Talmudic šuppāl/šippā) plus CAD Š/2.407–408 šiddu B: "curtain". Neither word is otherwise attested this early. For other suggestions, see W. Farber, ZA 91.262.
- 96–97: Readings and interpretation follow W. Farber, ZA 91:263.

Line Commentary

- 171: a-na KIN ḥa-a-a-ṭi ù ra-[bi-ši]—D. Schwemer, THeth 23.106 translates “Um den Späher und den Lau[erer] wegzuschicken” with the suggestion (p. 128) of S.M. Maul that the reference might be to a “Ritual”. Given the context, however, the most likely interpretation is KIN = šipru: “affliction (by disease)” (CAD Š/3.84a). The expression is most frequently used of strokes (mišittu), which are caused by rābišu’s, and of the attack of ghosts. For the construction, see especially ana KIN mi-šit-tú šá KA-šú DIB (AMT 78/1 + 28/7 iii 5; AMT 23/2: 14//AMT 78/1 + 28/7 iii 6; SpTU 1.46: 33) and ana KIN ŠU.GIDIM.MA la-a-z-zi šá ^{LÚ}MAŠ.MAŠ ZI-šú la i-[le-’i] (BAM 9: 55 = no. 244: 1). Compare no. 277: 1; cf. nos. 186a: 2–3; 191a: 2; 234: 1; 240: 1; 289: 1 (E); 349: 1. The reading is confirmed by ana LÚ ši-pir mi-šit-ti šup-šu-ḫi (AMT 82/2 iii 7). am-ma-<ta>.TA.ÀM-reading and interpretation follow D. Schwemer, THeth 23.106.

- 172: The restoration is based on the description of the ghost in the Neo-Assyrian dream vision of an Assyrian prince (SAA 3 no. 32: 6). If, however this is indeed an utukku-demon (reading UDUG rather than GIDIM₄ in line 173), then the text should be restored, after the same line, [UR.MAH ŠU^{II} GÌR^{II} IM.DUGUD GAR]-an.
- 173: The restoration is conjectural, but relies on the fact that both figurines were given explicit names (see line 175).
- 176: ^{TÚG}ŠÀ.GADA te-bi-iḫ-ši–^{TÚG}ŠÀ.GADA is equated with nēbeḫu at Emar (see D. Schwemer, THeth 23.128) and is therefore presumably some type of scarf or sash. The translation assumes that a single scarf or sash is being tied round the middle of all seven substitute figurines to fasten them together. [i-na] [SAG LÚ]GIG 7 U₄-mi TUŠ-a-šu-nu-ti–reading and interpretation follow D. Schwemer, THeth 23.106. Compare: 3 U₄-mi ina SAG LÚ.GIG tu-še-eš-šeb-šu-nu-ti (BAM 323: 82–83 = no. 228: 4–5).
- 177: GI.Š[UL?.ḪI?]-the restoration follows D. Schwemer, THeth 23.98.
- 179: tu-tam-ma-šu-nu-ti ú-tam-mi-ku-nu-ši: “you make them swear, (saying): “I have made you swear”–for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4; cf. ll. 180, 181.
- 180: n[a-aḫ-la-ap-t]u₄ tu-ut-tu-^Ibu¹–for references to this garment in Nuzi texts, see AHw 1374–1375. To judge from the way the signs are spaced on the tablet, Text A probably omitted the tuttubu. For swearing an oath by a cloak, compare the mamītu by ripping a cloak (Šurpu VIII 62).
- 182: ù ^Iam-ma¹–D. Schwemer, THeth 23.98 reads ù K[A]Š which leaves the ma unaccounted for. The remainder of the preserved part of the line is read after a suggestion by D. Schwemer, THeth 23.130 n. 319. The restoration of [GÌR-ku-nu lu] at the end (to go with the pár-sat of line 183) follows D. Schwemer, THeth 23.130 ad 183.

Line Commentary

- 65–67: These lines are virtually identical to TDP 168: 3–4.
65: For the reading of BAM 471 ii 26', see W. von Soden, ZA 43.274.
66: For the reading, see W. von Soden, ZA 43.274. For the interpretation of qerbet as referring to the “fit” (here translated “confusional state”) and meaning “close”, see M. Stol, Epilepsy 42–43 w/ n. 178; cf. pp. 65, 73.
67: For the use of the G and Gtn of nadû with rigmu, see CAD N/1.94 s.v. nadû

mng. 6. BAM 385 i 25'–26' rules out an otherwise attractive suggestion of W. von Soden, ZA 43.274 n. 2—GÛ-šú GIN₇ GÛ IM D[UGUD]-it-ta ŠUB-di. The writing GIDIM a-hu-ú shows that this expression is to be understood as “a strange ghost,” not “the ghost of a stranger.”

- 68: A generic recitation (usable for “hand” of ghost potions as well as amulets and salves) was meant to be recited over this salve (= no. 236 [see below]).

Translation

1. If a ghost afflicts a person and, as a result, he gets hot and then cold,¹¹⁶
 2. his confusional states are numerous¹¹⁷ and (a confusional state) is (always) nearby, he gets no rest day or night,
 3. (and) his cry is like¹¹⁸ the cry of a donkey,¹¹⁹ <the “hand” of> a strange ghost has seized him in the waste land. <To cure him,>
 4. You rub his flesh¹²⁰ with beerwort. You let (his flesh) cool. You crush <dried> “fox grape”. You rub him (with it) in oil.¹²¹

¹¹⁶ So Texts B and C. Text A has “and continually pursues him [day and night?].”

¹¹⁷ This actually appears in the previous line.

¹¹⁸ Texts B and C have “he continually emits his cry like the cry.”

¹¹⁹ Text C has “goat,” as does TDP 168: 3.

¹²⁰ Text B has “body”.

¹²¹ Text B has: “you mix (it) in erēnu-cedar resin/pūru-oil (and) rub him (with it).”

Line Commentary

1–38: The surface of BAM 323 (A) appears to have deteriorated since Köcher copied it. The half bracketing reflects the current state of the tablet.

1: Although fully preserved according to Köcher's copy, today the tablet shows [DIŠ NA GIDI]M.

- 1–2: The opening of the text is similar to KAR 227 i 1–4; LKA 69: 1–2 and LKA 70: 1–2. SAG.ḪUL.ḪA.ZA may be read either mukil rēš lemutti or sagḫulḫazû—see CAD M/2.185 s.v. mukil rēši mng. 3b and CAD S 24 s.v. sagḫulḫazû. The former reading is here preferred for the simple reason that the mukil and the rēš are unambiguously written out with some frequency in texts of Middle Assyrian date and later (see KAR 21: 3 [= no. 10: 2]; KAR 32: 13 [= no. 219: 13]); THeth 23.84ff: 84 [= no. 220: 27].
- 2: Although fully preserved according to Köcher’s copy, today the tablet shows [lu SAG.<ḪUL>.ḪA.ZA DI]B. lu [...]—in view of the presence of the lu (unfortunately no longer confirmable by collation), the end of the line presumably referred to other activities of the ghost.
- 3: The third ŠUB is shown hatched by Köcher, but is entirely effaced on the tablet today.
- 6: For the translation, see CAD Š 208a s.v. širpētu.
- 7: There is a tendency in this text for the ZU sign to be used where a SU is expected. See also 14, 87, and 104. Considering that ll. 5–6 and 8–10 clearly refer to the figurine, it is likely that the beginning of this line should also be taken as referring to the šalmu.
- 10: Readings are based on a collation by W. von Soden, ZA 43.273, although they do not agree with Köcher’s later copy.
- 13: E. Ebeling, TuL 81 read the verb as [li]-im-ta-an-nu and took it as a Gtn precativ. However, since the effaced sign preceding the im looks much more like an erased im than a li in the copy, and since instructions referring to the patient as active agent are usually given in the present tense, I prefer to interpret this form as a defective Gtn present.
- 19ff: I am indebted to W.R. Mayer for calling my attention to this duplicate and sharing his collations of BAM 323: 19–35 and parallels with me.
- 24: Collation courtesy W.R. Mayer. For the meaning, see AHw 1128b s.v. šaḫānu.
- 25: For the emendation, see CAD A/2.477 s.v. ašû. With W.R. Mayer, OrNS 56.202–203 and contra CAD N/1.300b s.v. napištu mng. 2b2’, this line begins a new phrase.
- 26: For a different reading and interpretation of this line (nab-laṭ-si-na meš-ri-ta), see W. von Soden apud J.M. Seux, Hymnes 426.
- 27: šūnuḫu: “to fatigue, tire”—see AHw 49a.
- 29–35: Collations courtesy W.R. Mayer.
- 34: For “fly” (i.e. flee) used of abstracts and persons, see CAD N/1.314 s.v. naprušu mng. 1c-2. This is presumably the Nt, for which see AHw 740b. pu-ka—generally the Nom. and Acc. of pû (“mouth”) with pronoun suffix is written pī-šu but, in literature, pû-šu is not uncommon (see AHw 872a).
- 36–37: tu-tam-ma-šu ... lu-u ta-ma-taṣ: “you make it swear ... (by heaven etc.) may you swear”—for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4.
- 38: “waste”—see CAD Ḫ 98b s.v. ḫarbu B.

Translation

1. If a ghost afflicts a person (and) continually pursues him or an alû-de[mon or a gallû-demon]
 2. or a mukil rēš lemutti-demon afflicts him or anything evil continual[ly] afflicts him or [pursues him?],
 3. dirt from an abandoned town, dirt from an abandoned house, dirt from an abandoned temple, dirt from a sepulcher, dirt from foundati[ons?],
 4. dirt from an abandoned canal, dirt from a road—you take (these) together. You mix (them) with ox blood. You make a figurine of whatever evil thing (it is).
 5. You clothe it with the skin of a lion. You thread carnelian (and) put it on its neck. You provide [it] with a waterskin
 6. and give it travel provisions. For three days, you put out nine dishes of barley gruel before it as its food ration.
 7. You stand it up on the roof of the patient's house and then you stir flour made from roasted grain into water and beer and then you pour out a libation for it.
 8. You plant three erēnu-cedar shavings around it.
 9. You surround it with a magic circle. An unbaked fermenting vessel
 10. you put over it as a cover. Let Šamaš see the fermenting vessel by day; let the stars see it by night.
 11. For three days, day (and) night, the āšipu sets up twenty two censers (burning) burāšu-juniper before Šamaš;
 12. by night, he scatters emmer flour before the stars of the night.
 13. Before Šamaš and the stars, for three days, he repeatedly recites over it.
14. Recitation: "Ghost (or) whatever is evil—from this day forward, you are extracted from the body of NN son of NN; you are expelled;
 15. you are driven away and banished. The god who set you (on),
 16. the goddess who set you (on)—they have removed you from the body of NN, son of NN, the patient."
17. On the third day, in the late afternoon, you set up an offering table before Šamaš.
 18. The patient raises the figurine and then you have him say as follows before Šamaš.
19. Recitation: "Šamaš, noblest of the Anunnaki, lordliest of the Igigi; august leader, ruler of the people,
 20. judge of heaven and earth, whose command is unalterable,
 21. Šamaš, who keeps the darkness in order (and) who establishes light for the people, twisting, numbness of the flesh, dizziness,

 30. šaššaṭu (and) insanity have they weighed out for me and daily they cause me to twist.
 31. Šamaš, you are the judge and I have brought you my life. I kneel for judgment of the case concerning the sickness¹²³ which afflicts me.
 32. Judge my case; make a decision about me. Until you cause my case to be decided,
 33. [may] you not give [a decision] for [any other] case. After you have caused my case to be decided,
 34. (and after) my obligation has let me go (and) fled [from] my [bo]dy, wherever
 I put my trust, let (those) gods come to agree with what you say.
 35. [May the heavens be pleased with] you; may the earth rejoice in you.”
36. [You] have him speak [thus]. You put it (the figurine) in a jar and then you make it swear.
 37. You say: “[By earth may you swear]; by heav[en] may you swear; by Šamaš may you swear.” and then you close its (the pot’s) mouth.¹²⁴

Translation

1. If the ghost of a person’s father or mother continually afflicts him, on the twenty-seventh!¹²⁵ of Abu,
 2. you take clay from a potter’s pit. You make a figurine of a man and a woman. You put a reed (made) of gold on the male figurine. You put a [st]aff¹²⁶ (made) of gold on the female figurine.
 3. You thread carnelian¹²⁷ on red wool. You put it on her (the female figurine’s) neck. You abundantly fit them (the figurines) out.
 4. You honor them, you treat them with care. Those figurines, for three days,
 5. you seat them at the head of the patient. You pour out hot broth for them.
 6. On the third day, the twenty-ninth, when the ghosts are (customarily) provided with food offerings, you make a sailboat.
 7. You assign their travel provisions. You present them to¹²⁸ Šamaš.
 8. You make them face downstream and you say as follows:

Line Commentary

- 3': SAL.KALAG šá i[h-ḥa-zu-šú]—given that “difficulty” is feminine and the victim masculine, perhaps “wants to marry” might be an appropriate translation. For problems “marrying” (and being divorced from) their victims, see Part 1 Chapter 5.
 5': i-na ap-ti TI—the instruction is certainly odd but may be paralleled in a Sumerian riddle: “My mother built me a house. They say ‘it’ (the subject of the riddle) comes out of a window; they say ‘it’ is going to go in through a window. Its solution: ‘it’ is the kispu-flour which men bring (out of the house by its window and into the tomb by its window)” (M. Civil, Aula Orientalis 5.32 no. 19: 1–4). ^{TÚG}a-ši-[an-na]—for the restoration, see D. Schwemer, THeth 23.135–136.

- 3: DAḪ-ṣib-šú: The translation assumes a form of aṣābu: “to add”; another possible reading would be taḫ(a)-ṣip from ḥasāpu: “to pluck out.” Although the second alternative is preferable grammatically, it seems to make less sense in this context. AHw 1302 suggests taḫṣibu from ḥaṣābu but notes that the meaning in this context is “unklar”.

Line Commentary

- 1: Picking a person as a mate for a dead man was a form of evil magic practiced by sorcerers (see Maqlû I 73, 107 and IV 17, 28). For suggestions as to how to restore the end of the line, see A. Tsukimoto, kispum 169.
- 3–4: The “purchase” of clay from the clay pit for ritual purposes is mentioned in other texts. For examples, see F.A.M. Wiggermann, Figures 28: 145–48 (= Spirits 12:145–148) and p. 51 (notes) who suggests a similar emendation and interpretation of BBR 2 n. 52: 4. On the tablet, the first GAR is a clear A (collation courtesy F. Al-Rawi).

- 5: A. Tsukimoto, kispum 168 suggests restoring “3”. There is, however, not enough space for this (collation courtesy F. Al-Rawi), and there should in any case have been an even number, perhaps [2] or [4].
- 7: The restoration of the end of the line is patterned after lines 12 and 13. A. Tsukimoto, kispum 168 suggests GUB-an.
- 8,10: The tablet appears to have PI instead of IGI and MI instead of LUM (collations courtesy F. Al-Rawi).
- 12–13: There seem to be two sets of ghosts involved here. For appeals to two sets of ghosts for help, see also KAR 227 iii 6–50//LKA 90 r. rt. col. 32; LKA 89 r. rt. col. 1–36; LKA 90 r. left col. 1–4. Interestingly, the next spell in the latter text (LKA 89 r. left col. 4) was DIŠ NA NU.MEŠ-šu ana LÚ.ÚŠ paq-du: “If figurines of a person are entrusted to a dead person.”
- 14: Collation courtesy F. Al-Rawi.
- 16: For MAN-ma: “secondly”, “once again”, see W. Farber, BID 127ff: 93, 113 and the commentary on p. 170.
- 17: A. Tsukimoto, kispum 168–70 suggests restoring [a]-ru-te (pipe for making libations to the dead).
- 21: The translation requires a slight emendation (with CAD Š 126a s.v. šēlu mng. 1b 2', against A. Tsukimoto, kispum 168–169). Collations are courtesy F. Al-Rawi.

Line Commentary

70–73: A somewhat similar recitation appears in O.R. Gurney, OECT 11 no. 71 r. 6–8.

73: ZI.AN.NA 𒂗É.PÀ ZI.KI.A 𒂗É.PÀ: “By heaven are you made to swear; by earth are you made to swear”–for a discussion of this translation, see Part 1, Chapter 4.

Translation

1. Recitation: “utukku-demon,¹²⁹ relent; alû-demon, relent; ghost, relent; gallû-demon, relent; evil god, relent; rābišu-demon, relent;
2. lamaštu-demon, relent; labāšu-demon, relent; aḫḫāzu-demon, relent. By the spell pronounced by Enki
3. (and) the hero, Asalluḫi, son of Eridu, (and) at the command of Ningirim, mistress of spells.
4. By heaven are you made to swear; by earth are you made to swear.”

¹²⁹ Text B adds “evil” to the name of the demons in this line.

5. You recite this recitation over amulets, salves, and potions.

Line Commentary

- 5: For the recitation, ḪUL.GÁL.ḪÉ.ME.EN, see M.J. Geller, Forerunners to UDUḪ-ḪUL, FAOS 12 (Stuttgart, 1985), 136/137 ad 857 and 138/139 ad 872. This recitation was considered particularly effective against evil alû and

AN.TA.ŠUB.BA (see S. Parpola, SAA 10 no. 238: 7–10).

17: habbu is presumably from hâbu: “to exorcise, purify by fumigation.”

Line Commentary

iii 10': The TI preserved at the end of the line confirms that, contra E. Reiner, JNES 17.207, BAM 471 iii 14' (= AMT 95/2: 5) is indeed a distinct prescription and not the diagnosis for BAM 471 iii 15'–16' (= AMT 95/2: 6–7) which, in any case, is divided from BAM 471 iii 14' by a line and has a separate incipit.

Translation

1. If ditto (“hand” of ghost persists in a person’s body and will not let up), you heat red urine up in an oven. On an inauspicious day, ii17': F. Köcher, BAM III, p. xxi associates AMT 97/6 i 11 with BAM 272: 12'. However, BAM 272 is not a ghost text but a potency ritual (edited in R.D. Biggs, ŠA.ZI.GA 53–54). A more likely suggestion, in F. Köcher, BAM II, p. xxii, relates AMT 97/6 i 11 to BAM 196: 6 (= no. 327).

Line Commentary

General Comments

As a rule, parallels (other than those relevant to edited texts or conveniently available from Köcher's introductions to the BAM texts) are not noted. Anyone interested in further parallels to the unedited sections of these texts is referred to R. Borger, HKL and reviews of the text volumes in H. Hirsch, ZA 59.326–327; E. Reiner, JNES 26.177–200 (STT vol. 2); W. Farber, BiOr 39.592–599, M. Geller, ZA 74.292–297 (BAM V–VI), etc.

Bibliography

CT 23.15–22+ was edited by E. Ebeling in his TuL 146–154 (no. 30F) and corrected by W. von Soden, ZA 43.270–272. It was reedited by G. Castellino in OrNS 24.240–274, who argued, on stylistic grounds, that CT 23.15–22+ was not a single text but should be divided into two separate texts (CT 23.15–18 and CT 23.19–22). In this division of CT

Arrangements of Prescriptions

23.15–22+ into two separate texts, Castellino is followed by J. Bottéro, ZA 73.153–203 (his nos. 10 and 11). However, from the photograph (obtained with the kind permission of the Trustees of the British Museum), it is now quite clear that CT 23.15–18 and CT 23.19–22 are, in fact, as R. Campbell Thompson thought, part of the same tablet. One of the recitations from this text (i 40'–45') is translated in J.M. Seux, Hymnes 423–424 and two others (i 26'–29' and i 33'–35') in B.R. Foster, Before the Muses 858–859. Parts of the text are discussed in S. Maul, Zukunftsbewältigung 46 w/ n. 109.
