

SULTAN MAHMUD
OF GHAZNIN

ST-52

CHECKED

281
25/53

370

TN

BY

MOHAMMAD HABIB

PROFESSOR OF HISTORY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

MUSLIM UNIVERSITY

ALIGARH

ALLAMA IQBAL LIBRARY

6281

Second Edition

COSMOPOLITAN PUBLISHERS, CIVIL LINES
BADAR BAGH, ALIGARH

(All rights reserved)

954.02
M7253

M7253

TO CHAIRMAN MAO TSE-TUNG
the greatest Chinese Statesman of all Time

AND
Commander-in-Chief Chu Teh
Premier Chou En-lai
Vice-Chairman Liu Shao-chi

AND

The Rank and File of the Chinese Communist Party, who after challenging imperialism, feudalism and 'bureaucratic capitalism'—and facing oppression, starvation, disease and death—have once more succeeded in making the largest country of the East a progressive area through the co-operation of all classes under the leadership of the proletariat (including the intelligentsia), and the elimination of all discriminations based on religion, race, nationality, birth, colour and sex.

“The culture of the New Democracy is scientific in character. It opposes all feudal and superstitious thoughts and advocates searching for truth from concrete facts; it advocates objective truth as well as the unity of theory and practice.....We must respect our own history and should not be isolated from it. But this respect for history means only to set history in its proper place among the sciences, to respect its dialectical development, not to worship the ancient times and to disapprove the modern times, or to praise and esteem all feudal, poisonous elements. For this reason, what is important with the people and the youthful students is to lead them to look forward, not to look backward.”

Mao Tse-tung : China's New Democracy.

List of Contents

Preface to the Second Edition.

Chapter I. The Muslim World in the Tenth Century.

Chapter II. Career of Sultan Mahmud.

Chapter III. The Character and Value of Mahmud's Work.

Chapter IV. Fall of the Ghaznavide Empire.

Appendix : Authorities.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND EDITION

About twenty-seven years have passed since this book was written. In an atmosphere surcharged with hatreds during the Lucknow communal riot of 1924, I composed and recomposed many of its passages to give expression to that longing for humanity, justice, tolerance and secularism which has been torturing my Eastern soul. What has happened since then—the growth of hatreds on a global scale and the death of millions and millions of innocent men, women and children to satisfy the greed of the governing classes—has only served to confirm me in my opinions. The book was hailed by a storm of criticism in the Urdu press. But as this criticism—vindictive, bitter, hostile—was based on a complete ignorance of the originals, I took no notice of it. I reprint the book as it was written.

* * * *

The fact that Muslim leaders during the last three hundred years, whether politicians or mullahs, have known no other psychology except the psychology of retreat, and that, thanks to them, all Muslim communities have been subject to recurrent waves of ever-rising reactionary fanaticisms with the consequence that the Mussalmans, unable to stand on their own feet and to adjust their ways of life and their institutions to the strenuous conditions of the modern world or to take their proper part in the expanding vistas opened by modern science, have been driven to seek the protection of some foreign imperialism or other—all this should not blind us to the fact that (a) the Muslim Revolution has been a vital fact in world-history for all time, (b) that the Quranic conception of God was, and can still be, a revolutionary force of incalculable value for the attainment of human welfare, and (c) that the higher Muslim religion and culture of the Middle Ages as taught by its best exponents anticipates, and is indistinguishable from, that "religion for the service of humanity" which Chairman Mao Tse-tung and our own Mahatamaji have promulgated in this generation. The racial arrogance which has been one of the chief features of Western Europe and America during the last three centuries is a result of the temporary superiority given to them by the rise of capitalism and capitalistic production. We cannot allow ourselves to be infected by the same disease. We stand not for the substitution of one discrimination for another but for the elimination of all discriminations.

* * * *

The history of no country has any meaning or value except in the context of world-history. Mahmud is one of the outstanding features of Medieval Ajam (non-Arab Asia) and will be judged for all times by the services he may have rendered to—or the havoc he may have wrought on—the people concerned. The historian, as such, has no country and no creed. He is a student of the whole of humanity. He must investigate man's 'dialectical march' from religion to religion, from country to country, and from age to age on the basis of his expanding ideals, his improving tools of production and his developing social organisations.

Still if the kindly reader thinks that he must form his estimate of Sultan Mahmud on a religio-theological basis, I will venture to draw his attention to two great authorities, whose religious orthodoxy at least cannot be doubted.

Imam Abul Fazl Baihaqi was a junior officer of the Royal Secretariat in the time of Sultan Mahmud; during the reign of Masud, son of Mahmud, he became the assistant of Abu Nasr Mishtakan, the Royal Secretary or Dabir; still later, when the Ghaznavide Empire had contracted into a local kingdom with little power or prestige, Baihaqi retired into private life to pass his remaining days in devotions and in the composition of the three volumes of his famous Tarikh-i Aal-i Subuktigin (History of the Dynasty of Subuktigin). The retired Ghznavide officer was fearless in speaking the truth and we need not be surprised at the fact that only the third volume of his great work, devoted to Sultan Masud, has survived. However, in this surviving volume, Imam Baihaqi writes :—

“Amir Masud called me in. ‘Welcome’, he said, and ordered the servant, Aghachi, to bring the bags. ‘Take these’, he said to me, ‘There are one thousand gold pieces, each weighing a misqal in every bag. (A misqal =  $1\frac{3}{7}$  drams). Tell Abu Nasr that this is the gold which my father (may God be pleased with him!) has brought from his holy wars (ghazwa) in India; idols of gold were broken to pieces and melted (into ingots). It is lawful (halal) property. During every journey they bring from this stock to me so that anything I wish to give in charity may be from property which is lawful (halal) without doubt, I hear that Abul Hasan, the Qazi of Bust, and his son, are facing desperate poverty; they accept nothing from anybody and have very little to live upon. Give one bag to the father and one to the son, so that they may be able to live in affluence on lawful property and I may have discharged in part my obligation (to God) for the recovery of my health.'

"I took the bags, brought them to Abu Nasr and narrated everything to him. He thanked God and said, 'His Majesty (Khudawand) has given good orders. I have heard that at times Abul Hasan and his son are even unable to find 10 dirhams (copper coins).' Abu Nasr went into his house and the bags were taken with him.

"After afternoon prayer-time (zohr) Abu Nasr sent some one and called Qazi Abul Hasan and his son. They came and Abu Nasr conveyed the Sultan's message to the Qazi. The Qazi offered many prayers (for the Sultan) and replied; 'This gift is an honour. I accept it and give it back. I cannot take it for the Day of Reckoning is near and I will not be able to render an account for it. I will not pretend that I am not in great need. But since I am content with the little I have, of what use is this gold to me?'

" 'God be praised,' said Abu Nasr, 'This gold has been brought by Sultan Mahmud from idol-temples through (the strength of) his sword; the idols have been destroyed and broken to pieces. The Commander of the Faithful (i.e. the Baghdad Caliph) has considered its acceptance (by him) to be correct. But the Qazi will not accept it !'

“ ‘May the life of His Majesty be prolonged,’ the Qazi replied, ‘but the condition (hal) of the Commander of the Faithful is different from mine. He is the ruler of a territory. Further, you Khwaja (Abu Nasr) have been with Amir Mahmud in his campaigns. I have not. It has not been revealed to me whether these campaigns were conducted in accordance with the traditions of the Prophet (Blessing on him !) or not. I will on no condition accept this gold or any obligations about it.’

“ ‘If you do not accept it for yourself,’ said Abu Nasr, ‘give it to your pupils, to the deserving (mustahiqqin) and to the durweshes.’

“ ‘I know of no deserving person in Bust to whom gold may be given. And why should I place myself in the position that while another person takes away the gold, I have to render an account for it on the Day of Reckoning. Under no circumstances will I undertake this duty.’

“Abu Nasr turned to the son. ‘You take your share.’

“ ‘May the life of the great Khwaja be prolonged. I am the son of the person who has just spoken and have also studied with him. If I had seen him only for a single day and come to know of his spiritual eminence (ahwal) and his ways of life, I would have considered it my duty to follow him all my life. But I have been with him for years. I am also, like him, afraid of the account I will have to render on the Day of Reckoning. The meagre portion of worldly goods

I possess is lawful ; it is also sufficient for me. I am not desirous of increasing it.'

" 'You two are great souls. May Allah give you in abundance !' Khwaja Abu Nasr replied. He wept and sent them back. He was very thoughtful the rest of the day and kept reflecting on the conversation. Next day he wrote a letter to Amir Masud explaining the situation and returned the gold. The Amir was surprised." (Persian text, p. 636—38),

It was not to be expected that the great Shaikh Sa'di in his Gulistan, the most widely read of all Persian books, would say anything shocking to the religious consciousness of his time. And yet his estimate of Mahmud is low and, in fact, cruel. "A Malik (ruler) of Khorasan saw in a dream," Sa'di tells us, "that the whole body of Sultan Mahmud son of Subuktigin had been disintegrated and reduced to dust. But his eye-balls were still rotating in their sockets and looking around them. The philosophers failed to interpret the dream, but a durwesh correctly interpreted it and said : 'He is still gazing (in distraction) that his Empire is in the hands of another.' " (Gulistan, Chapter I). There was for Shaikh Sa'di and his contemporaries no question of Mahmud's services to Islam. They were not members of the Indo-Turkish governing class of Delhi and Daulat-abad, under whose aegis most legends about Sultan Mahmud were manufactured. A very good example are the impossible stories we find in the Futuh-us Salatin of Isami. It is only when Islamic ideals were suppressed in order to manufacture Islam into a governing-class creed that Mahmud could become 'a religious hero'.

And the most impossible of modern imperialisms—the 'dream imperialism' of the Pan-Islamists—keeps that fiction alive. The 'real Mahmud', who certainly did not deserve the stricture of Sa'di, would have been as much surprised at this fiction as his son was surprised at the Qazi of Bust's refusal to accept the gold of Indian temples as a royal gift.

An apology is due for my use of the word Ghaznin. The exact term, Ghazni'ain—meaning the two cities on either side of the river—is too complex for use in English. 'Ghazni' is a modern term and should be only used for modern Ghazni, which is a single city surrounded by a moat-wall. 'Ghaznah' is the Arabicised form which our Persian historians do not use.

The first edition had no Index. I also considered a list of authorities to be unnecessary. The kindness of my young friend and colleague, Mr. Khaliq Ahmad Nizami, M.A. has enabled me to remove both these shortcomings.

Badar Bagh,
Muslim University, Aligarh.
Dec. 22, 1951.

Mohammad Habib.

CHAPTER I

THE MUSLIM WORLD IN THE TENTH CENTURY

"Almost all ethical doctrines and religious creeds," says John Stuart Mill, "are full of meaning and vitality to those who originate them and to the direct disciples of the originators. Their meaning continues to be felt in undiminished strength, and is perhaps brought out into fuller consciousness, so long as the struggle lasts to give the doctrine or creed an ascendancy over other creeds. At last it either prevails, and becomes the general opinion, or its progress stops; it keeps possession of the ground it has gained, but ceases to spread further. From this time may be usually dated the decline in the living power of the doctrine. For when it has become a hereditary creed, and comes to be received passively, not actively—when the mind is no longer compelled, in the same degree as at first, to exercise its vital powers on the questions which its beliefs present to it, there is a progressive tendency to forget all of the belief except the formularies, or to give it a dull and torpid assent, as if accepting it on trust dispensed with the necessity of realizing it in consciousness."

This weakening of spiritual zeal has shown itself in all religions at various stages, and is painfully obvious in the history of Islam from the decline of the Abbasid Caliphate in the ninth century to the Mongol conquest of Muslim Asia and the growth of mysticism in the thirteenth. It was a period of great achievements in science, literature and art, and the area of human knowledge was enlarged by scholars trained in the philosophy of Plato and Aristotle. It was a period of feverish political activity ; empires were established and pulled down ; cities were founded and destroyed. But it was a period of refinement and culture, of an alluring, materialistic civilisation—not of faith. The missionary zeal of the earlier Muslims had evaporated in the signal success it had achieved, and the creed that had come into the world for the elevation of the lower classes was being used as a bulwark for the protection of vested interests and the continuation of time-honoured abuses. Of hairsplitting theology there was enough and to spare; and the sectarian fanaticism which such theology excited discolours the annals of many generations, during which ‘orthodox’ and ‘heretics’ persecuted and tortured each other with an inhumanity they never displayed in their dealings with the non-Muslims, who were regarded as the honourable opponents of an honourable war. Islam had become a matter of custom and tradition and a means for procuring the salvation of the individual soul. It was no longer a world-wide force of democratic upheaval. People prayed and fasted and read the Quran with devotion; they lived according to what they considered to be the true interpretation of the law ; but the vision of a new heaven and a new earth, such as had inspired the Saracenic invaders of Persia, was totally beyond their ken. They had lost their proselytising fervour and were content to keep their creed to themselves. The boundaries of the Muslim world remained where the Omayyad Caliphs had left them, and no new countries or peoples were brought within the fold. And internally also the political, religious and social unity of the Muslim world was being gradually undermined by the forces of disintegration.

The idea that all purely Muslim populations should be under the suzerainty of the Caliph has never been absent from Muslim consciousness. Nevertheless the lands of the Caliphate were too extensive to be governed from a single centre, and in the course of the last two centuries the political and administrative power of the Caliph had gradually declined. Local princes raised their heads and the orders of Baghdad ceased to command the implicit obedience that had been yielded to them in the good, old days of Harunur Rashid. Spain had become independent ; a rival Caliphate had been founded by the Fatimids of Egypt ; and, nearer home, the growth of a number of 'minor dynasties' paralysed the Caliph's power in Iraq, Persia and Turkestan. Yet the moral prestige of the Caliph in the eyes of his co-religionists was immense. He was the successor of the Prophet and public sentiment regarded him with deep respect. He was the fountain-head of all political authority ; kings and tribal chiefs were in theory subordinate to him, and his sanction alone could provide a legal basis for their power. The maddest of political adventurers would think many times before he directly defied the Caliph's authority.

Of the 'minor dynasties' that jostled each other in Persia and Turkestan, the most important and powerful was the House of Saman founded by Amir Ismail Samani in 911 A.D. The Samanids, with their capital at Bokhara, held an insecure sway over Trans-Oxania (Mawaraun Nahr) and Khorasan, their power being almost constantly defied by rebellious governors and insubordinate officials. Beyond the Jaxartes the unconverted Turks and Tartars were ruled by their tribal chiefs, the most powerful of whom was the Khan of Kashghar. In Eastern Persia the Shiaite dynasty of Buwaih, with its capital at Ray, was founded by Ruknuddoulah Daylami in 933 and gradually expanded its power in Iraq till even Baghdad came within its grasp. The Caliph was left to slumber in his palace, as 'a venerable phantom,' while the Buwaihids assumed the powers and the title of 'Commander-in-Chief' and directed the secular affairs of the capital. The other dynasties are too many and too unimportant to be mentioned here. They were constantly at war with each other.

As if this division of political power was not enough to paralyse the energies of the (ii) Religious divisions—Sunnis, Shias and 'heretics.' 'Faithful', acute differences on questions of dogma also appeared with an intensity of bitterness which Mussalmans now living can hardly realise. The division of Mussalmans into Sunnis and Shias had come very early. The Shias claimed that the Prophet's cousin and son-in-law, Ali, should have been his immediate successor while the Sunnis upheld the legality of the actual order of succession—Abu Bakr, Omar, Usman and Ali. But this political difference slowly developed into difference of a more fundamental nature; and Shiaism became the Persian interpretation, as against Sunnism or the Arab interpretation, of the Prophet's teachings.* As yet, however, the difference between the Sunnis and the main body of Shias was not so

---

* The point requires some elucidation. The great religions of the world may be divided into two groups—the Semitic (Judaism, Christianity and Islam) and the Aryan (Hinduism, Jainism and Buddhism). Broadly speaking, Semitic religions give more importance to the ethical, and the Aryan religions to the metaphysical, aspect of faith. Now after the Arab conquest of Persia, the Persians naturally interpreted the new faith in the light of their already existing metaphysical conceptions which they largely shared with the Hindus. One of the most important of these was the idea of incarnation, the appearance of the Supreme Being in a human form. Every religion has felt the necessity of finding some means of intercourse between the real and the sensible world. In Islam the angel Gabriel brings the message of the one world to the other. Aryan religions explain it by a series of incarnations by which the Creator comes to teach the law to the created. In the extreme forms of Shiaism, a highly Aryanised interpretation of Islam, the Prophets and the Imams become Divine Incarnations, a belief which the orthodox considered to be identical with idolatry. And yet a priori Shiaism and Sunnism must be considered equally valid interpretations of a common faith; nor is it possible to give any valid reason why acute as it afterwards became ; one sect shaded off into another by insensible gradations ; it was difficult to say where Sunnism ended and Shiaism began, and many persons then living would have found it hard to decide to which sect they really belonged. But the most bitter animosity prevailed between the 'orthodox' Sunnis and the extreme wing of the Shiaites, who believed in only 'seven' out of the 'twelve' Imams of Shiaism, and were generally known as the 'heretics' (mulahidah). This extreme the Arab outlook on life should be in greater consonance with Reality than the Persian. Another Indo-Aryan doctrine was 'monism' the belief which regarded all existence as the emanation of one Being and all change as the evidence of a Cosmic Purpose. To the Semitic conception of law as an external command, the Aryans had opposed the belief that law was an inner aspiration of the soul itself. What is known as Tasawwuf (Muslim mysticism) is Islam interpreted in the light of Indo-Persian monism, in which God ceases to be a being external to the individual and law is no longer a command imposed from without. Muslim mystics have always claimed that their doctrines are based on the Quran and rightly so, however unpalatable such a confession may appear to those who imagine that a religion can long exist without developing a system of metaphysics. But the contention of the Muslim mystics is quite compatible with the fact that the development of mysticism in Islam was mainly the work of Persian thinkers, who were steeped in the doctrine of monism; and that in its mature form the teachings of Tasawwuf are broadly the same as the philosophy of the Neo-Platonists and the Upanishads. Thus Islam interpreted in the light of the Incarnation-idea has given us Shiaism, which in its orthodox form claims that Ali should have been the first Caliph and in its heretical phase asserts him and the Imams to be Divine Incarnations, while interpreted in the light of Aryan monism, it has led to Tasawwuf, the finest achievement of Indo-Persian genius in the realm of thought.

(Continued)

---

wing, though divided into many groups, of whom the Ismailis of Arabia and the Carmathians of Multan were most notorious, was unified by a common hatred of the Sunnis owing to the punishment which the latter inflicted on 'heretics' in general, without trying to distinguish between one kind of heresy and another. Their great dogmatic fault, from the orthodox viewpoint, was their belief in the Prophet's Family as a Divine Incarnation. But every species of vice was attributed to them ; and it was their supposed moral character rather than their actual religious beliefs that excited the frantic intolerance of the orthodox. They were accused of permitting incest and of legalising marriages within prohibited degrees ; they were blamed, and with more truth, for resorting to assassination as a political weapon and of trying to establish a heretical hierarchy in place of the secular state. A 'heretic' was slain wherever he was found ; but simple death, as a rule, was considered too mild a punishment, and the 'heretic' who escaped being torn to pieces by infuriated mobs, was put to death by the governments with the most revolting tortures that the mind of man could invent. To this insensate persecution the 'heretics' replied with weapons which are always in the hands of a determined minority. They formed secret societies which could not be unearthed by the clumsy spy-system of the states and their propagandists (daiy) in various disguises penetrated into every corner of the Muslim world. Growing yet bolder, they established the rival Caliphate of Egypt, captured the Holy Places and removed the Black Stone from the sacred temple of Mecca. Finally, they seized a number of forts in Persia, the chief of which was Alamut, developed murder into a fine art, and Sunni kings, statesmen and theologians were kept in perpetual fear of death by the unseen dagger of the assassinating 'heretic'. It was a mad dance, but none the less it continued till the middle of the thirteenth century when 'orthodox' and 'heretic' alike were compelled to lick the dust under the Mongol conqueror's iron heel.*

---

*A detailed study of the Carmathians and Ismailis does not come within our scope. Their ideals and their organisation are equally interesting. Like all revolutionary minorities they seem to have included men of all shades of opinion from tolerant philosophers like Hakim Nasir Khusrau to mere cut-throats and assassins. Nizamul Mulk in his 'Siyasat Namah' considers them a pre-Muslim Persian sect, founded by Mazdak a generation before the Prophet and continued into Islam. A mysterious charm surrounds the fortress of Alamut (eagle's nest) and its 'mock paradise', from whence the 'Old Man of the Mountain' was wont to send out his young men to assassinate his opponents. The word 'assassin' comes from hashish (hemp) with which the victim of the fraud was drugged before being taken to the 'paradise'; its houris, it is said, had such an influence on his imagination that his soul found no rest in the world outside and the promise that he would reach 'paradise' at once by the performance of a heroic deed was enough to induce him to wield the assassin's knife and face the inevitable punishment at the hands of the orthodox. The fort was destroyed by Halaku, grandson of Chengiz. For literature on the subject, besides the 'Siyasat Namah' see the chapters on the 'heretics' in 'Rauzat-us-Safa' and 'Tarikh-i-Guzidah'. The third volume of Alaaddin Ata Malik Juwaini's 'Tarikh-i-Jahan Gusha' was written on the basis of the Alamut library.

“And this is my last advice unto you,” the Prophet said in his last speech at Mecca, “You are of one brotherhood.” And there is no social principle of their faith to which the Mussalmans have been more true; religious unity has always over-ridden all tribal and racial distinctions. Nevertheless there have been avowed, though futile, attempts at racial supremacy; in Muslim lands, as elsewhere, racial pride has been an uncomfortable aspect of human nature. The Omayyad Caliphs made a bold attempt to convert the Empire into a heritage of the Arab aristocracy; the Persian Revolution, which overthrew the Omayyads and placed the Abbasids on the throne of the Caliphate, naturally brought the Arab regime to an end and transferred to the Persians the superiority formerly enjoyed by the Arabs. But a rival race soon appeared to contest the prize with the victorious Persians. From the marshes of Anatolia in the west to the shores of the Pacific Ocean in the east, there extended the various tribes of the Sino-Mongolian race—Turks, Tartars, Turkomans, Tibetans, Chinese and Mongols—distinguished by some very marked common features. They had allied scripts all written from top to bottom. They were short of stature, with high cheek-bones and small eyes, but remarkably well-built and inured to the hardships of war. With the expansion of the Muslim frontier to the north and west of Persia, one Turkish tribe after another was brought within the Islamic pale, and the Turks surprised their conquerors by the remarkable courage of their men and the no less remarkable beauty of their women. Turkish body-guards were appointed to watch over the safety of kings ; Turkish slave-girls intrigued in royal harems ; and slowly, but surely, Turkish adventurers shouldered out the Persians from all places of military command. By the middle of the tenth century the revolution was complete, and the Turks had taken up among the Mussalmans a position broadly similiar to that of the Kshattriyas among the Hindus. That only a Turk should rule a Muslim land or lead its armies on the field of battle was considered by the ordinary citizen an immutable precept of political morality. Of the dynasties that have ruled Muslim Asia from the tenth to the eighteenth century, an over-whelming majority has belonged to the Turkish stock.* Administrative posts were still left to the Persians and they had an exclusive monopoly of art and literature, for which the Turks never showed much aptitude. A Persian was not regarded as a sudra or treated as a member of the subject race ; his function in the state was different, but his social status was as honourable as that of the Turk. Nevertheless Turkish military predominance had its darker side ; the government of even the most tolerant

(iii) Racial divisions—Persians, Arabs and Turks.

---

* One of greatest of historical errors is the prevalent opinion that the kings of Medieval India were Pathans. It was originated by General Briggs, the most stupid of translators and the most pedantic of historians. Barring the non-descript Khiljis, all dynasties of Delhi came from the Turkish stock, except the Syeds, Lodhis and Suris. The Sultans of Ghaznin and Ghor, the Slave Kings, the Tughlaqs and the Great Moghuls all belonged to the Turko-Mongolian race. An Afghan king in Afghanistan even would have been an anamoly before the days of Ahmad Shah Abdali.

Turkish rulers seemed to keep the mailed fist in reserve; and Persian genius, compelled to occupy a secondary place in politics, found an outlet for its energies in organising religious agitation against the orthodox Turks.

CHAPTER II

CAREER OF SULTAN MAHMUD

In 962 A. D. Abdul Malik, the Samanid king of Bokhara, died and his brother and Alptigin. uncle both claimed the throne.

Alptigin, the governor of Khorasan, was consulted by the nobles of the capital and advised in favour of the uncle ; but before his messenger reached Bokhara, the common consent of the nobles had raised Mansur, the brother of the deceased monarch, to the throne. Realising that he had backed the wrong horse, Alptigin acted with loyalty and discretion. Leaving Khorasan to its legitimate ruler, the Samanid king, he marched to Ghaznin with his personal retainers, drove out its ruler, Abu Bakr Lawik, and frustrated Mansur's attempts to dislodge him from his new principality. Alptigin died in 969 A.D. after a prosperous reign of eight years during which his general Subuktigin kept tinkering at the Indian frontier. He was succeeded by his son, Abu Ishaque, who died before he had reigned for a year. After him three of Alptigin's Turkish generals were raised one after another to the throne. The first, Bilkatigin (969—977), was a pious and brave man, but his successor Pirey (977) turned out to be 'a great villain' and was deposed in favour of the famous Subuktigin.*

Amir Nasiruddin Subuktigin had been for several years the most prominent man in Subuktigin. the kingdom when the people, 'quite sated with the villainies of Pirey,' placed him on the throne in 977. He eradicated the foundations

---

*Some historians have ignored, while others have denied, the existence of Bilkatigin and Pirey. Their reigns are, however, proved by their coins and the most reliable chronicles refer to them. A great confusion prevails as to dates. Colonel Raverty, after an unnecessarily arrogant criticism of Minhajus Siraj, gives the following dates of the Hijri Era : Alptigin (322-352), Abu Ishaque (352-353). Bilkatigin (353-362), Pirey (362-367). All authorities are agreed in declaring 367 as the year of Sabuktigin's accession, but a little reflection would have shown the esteemable Colonel that his other dates were preposterous. Abdul Malik died in 350, and Alptigin, who was governor of Khorasan in the reign of that monarch and conquered Ghaznin after Abdul Malik's death, could not have reigned in Ghaznin from 322 to 353. The date of the conquest of Ghaznin is 351 according to the joint testimony of Minhajus Siraj, Hamdullah Mustawfi and Ferishta. The question remains—how divide the years 351 to 367 between the four reigns ? Hamdullah Mustawfi and Ferishta give sixteen years to Alptigin and one to Abu Ishaque. But they ignore Bilkatigin and Pirey who have to be accommodated. In spite of the criticism of his translator, Minhajus Siraj gives the most rational account—Alptigin, 8 years; Ishaque, 1 year; Bilkatigin, 10 years; and Pirey, 1 year. From this I get the years of the Christian era given above. The corresponding dates for the Samanid Kings, on the testimony of Minhajus Siraj and Hamdullah Mustawfi, are : Abdul Malik bin Nuh (343-350), Mansur bin Nuh (350-365), Nuh bin Mansur (365-387).

of tyranny and 'spread the carpet of justice and mercy over the land'. What was no less important, he kept the officers in hand and started his city-state on that career of aggressive conquests which brought it to the notice of the eastern world. Soon after his accession he annexed the territories of Bust and Qusdar, and marching towards the Indian frontier, 'captured a few forts and built some mosques' (978). It was a small affair but had important consequences.

First War with Jaipal.	Afghanistan till the eighth century had been politically and culturally a part of India, and its native population had adopted the Buddhist creed.* But
-----------------------------------	--

---

*Some time before the Christian era the Turki Shahi (Kushan) dynasty of Scythian Turks founded by Barhatigin began a career of conquest till under its greatest monarch, Kanishka, a large part of Northern India, Afghanistan, Turkestan and Mawaraun Nahr was included in the Kushan Empire. The Turks were quickly assimilated by Indian civilisation, but the result was not altogether fortunate. For Buddhism, instead of raising the barbarians to its own level, found it easier to pander to their idolatrous beliefs; and that preposterous mixture of rationalism and priestcraft, known as Mahayana Buddhism, in which the philosophy of the Great Teacher is reconciled with the gods of every locality, became the creed of the peoples included in the Kushan Empire. Kanishka's capital, Peshawar, became a centre for disseminating the new faith, and centuries later the Mussalmans found the wild tribes of Afghanistan worshipping the Buddha in the form of the lion (Sakya Sinha). From the downfall of the Kushan Empire till the Saracenic invasion of Afghanistan in the eighth century all is dark. Alberuni states that the Turki Shahi dynasty of Barhatigin included no less than the frontiers of Islam had been gradually pushed across the country and now the two forces stood opposite to each other in the province of Lamaghan on the southern side of the Kabul river. Rai Jaipal of Lahore, overlord of the Punjab, was driven to desperation by this slow diminution of his ancestral kingdom; Subuktigin's repeated invasions had made his life uncomfortable; and resolved to drive matters to a final issue, he marched to the valley of Lamaghan with 'soldiers black as night and impetuous as a torrent'. Subuktigin and his son Mahmud advanced from Ghaznin. The battle raged for several days, but the victor could not be distinguished from the vanquished. Then an untimely snow-storm shattered Jaipal's calculations.* "All at once the sky was covered with clouds; thunder and lightning appeared; the light of day was changed into the darkness of night; and the cold became so severe that most horses and beasts of burden died, and the blood of the Hindus froze within their veins." There was no alternative to a humiliating surrender, sixty kings, the last of whom, Lagaturman, was deposed by his Brahman wazir, Kallur, the first ruler of the Hindu Shahi dynasty, which Subuktigin found ruling over the Punjab. The pedigree of the kings written on silk was preserved in the fortress of Nagarkot but Alberuni says he was unable to see it. The order of the Hindu Shahi dynasty is given by him as follows: Kallur, Samand, Kamalu, Bhim, Jaipal, Anandpal, Tarojanpal (Tilocanpal) and Bhimpal. (Alberuni, Sachau's Tr. Vol. ii, p. 13).

(Continued)

---

*The snow-storm is said to have been caused by some dirt thrown into a mysterious pool of clear water by Mahmud's order. Similar beliefs were widely prevalent among the Mongols and Turks. It is obvious that the Indian army would suffer more than the enemy, who was accustomed to the climate.

and Jaipal promised a million dirhams and fifty elephants to the enemy who had retained his activity in the intense cold.

But in the safety of Lahore Rai Jaipal forgot the promise he had made, and Subuktigin's envoys, instead of receiving the promised tribute, found themselves in prison. "I will not release these men", Jaipal declared, Second War with Jaipal—annexation of Lamaghan and Peshawar.

"unless Subuktigin sets free the hostages he has taken from me." The consequence was another war. Subuktigin retaliated by plundering Lamaghan and Jaipal appealed to his brother Rais, who responded to the call. The rulers of Delhi, Ajmere, Kannauj and Kalanjar sent him men and money, and thus strengthened he once more marched to the Lamaghan valley with a hundred thousand horse and soldiers beyond all computation. The battle which followed demonstrated the futility of an unmanageable crowd. Subuktigin wore out the patience of the Indians by attacking them repeatedly with picked bodies of five hundred horse; and after a desperate onslaught in which 'swords could not be distinguished from spears, men from elephants and heroes from cowards', drove them pell-mell back to the Indus. Lamaghan and Peshawar fell into the hands of the victor. Subuktigin established his tax-collectors over the conquered territory and garrisoned Peshawar with two thousand men.

Some twelve or thirteen years after these events, a rift in the Samanid kingdom opened the door to a more important acquisition. Abu Ali Simjuri, the governor of Khorasan, and Faiq, an unscrupulous politician experienced in such business, rebelled against the Samanid king, Amir Nuh, a respectable nonentity; and Nuh appealed to Subuktigin for help. The latter came to the assistance of his over-lord with an alacrity that should have made Amir Nuh pause. Subuktigin and Mahmud crushed the rebels in a fierce battle before Herat, and as a reward for this loyal service, Mahmud was appointed governor of Khorasan in 994 A.D. and he established himself at Naishapur. The finest province of Persia thus became for all practical purposes a part of the kingdom of Ghaznin. The glory of the victory remained with Amir Nuh; its fruits with his allies. It was not Mahmud's principle to give back what had once come within his iron grasp.

Acquisition of Khorasan.

Amir Subuktigin died in Balkh in 997 A.D. after a reign of twenty years, and in accordance with his will his son, Amir Ismail, was placed on the throne. But Mahmud was not prepared to be ousted by his younger brother, and Ismail was unwilling to agree to a reasonable compromise. The consequence was civil war. Mahmud marched against Ghaznin from Naishapur while Ismail hurried to protect it from Balkh. The two brothers met near the capital. Mahmud's charge broke Ismail's centre and the 'iron-hearted sword wept tears of blood over the fate of warlike men'. Ismail was imprisoned in a fort of Jurjan and provided with all the requisites of a comfortable existence.

The new Amir, who ascended the throne at the age of thirty, was destined to surprise and stagger his contemporaries with the brilliance of his achievements and to establish a short-lived empire extending from the Punjab to the Caspian and from Samarkand to Ray. Ever since the decline of the Abbasid Caliphate, men of small imaginations and small means had been striving for a supremacy totally beyond their reach. In Mahmud the long expected hero seemed to have arrived. The princes of Persia and Turkestan trembled at his name, and Subuktigin's mystic dream of a tree rising out of his fire-place and overshadowing the world was realised. But contemporaries were too dazzled with the genius of the man, who never lost a battle during forty years of ceaseless warfare, to discover the impermanence of his work. To posterity, on the other hand, Mahmud became a legend and a name. Latter-day fanatics have loved to portray him as a hero after their own hearts—the 'Holy Warrior' in the 'Path of the Lord' in whose footsteps all pious Muslim kings should aspire to tread; and moralists of a different type have held him up as an example, not of righteousness but of personal greed, of the avarice that clings to wordly possessions, 'so laboriously won, so precariously held, so inevitably lost'. Yet the astute, wine-loving Sultan of Ghazni was neither the one nor the other. Far from being a missionary, he was not even a fanatic, though like a clever man with a clear eye to his own profit, he fought with Hindus and Mussalmans alike for the extension of his Empire. But if his faith never rose to the heights of a sublime passion, neither did his stinginess amount to a disease. He did not gloat over his hoards like a miser but kept them intact for the financial stability of his government.

The gift of a commanding personality had been denied to Mahmud. He was a man of medium height with well-proportioned limbs, but the small-pox marks on his face deprived him of all external beauty and grace. It is said that on seeing his face in the mirror once he felt very dejected. "Looking at the face of kings is believed to strengthen the eye-sight of men," he remarked to his wazir, "but a face such as mine will probably injure the onlooker's eye." "Not one in a thousand sees your face," the quick witted Wazir replied, "but your moral qualities affect them all. Strive in the path of virtue and you will be loved by all." Mahmud was no pahilwan; feats of personal prowess were beyond his strength, though his frame bore all the hardships entailed by his continuous campaigns. But he did not subject himself to more discomforts on his campaigns than was absolutely necessary, and his travelling camp surprised his subjects by its splendour. He was too good a general to endanger his personal safety by needless heroism; nevertheless, when the occasion required, he mounted an elephant and plunged bravely into the thickest of the enemy lines. His unquestioned supremacy over his fellow-men was due to the qualities of the mind—the acuteness with which he unravelled a complicated situation and read the character of those around him, the restless activity of a man determined to be great combined with the instinctive behaviour of one born to command. A king had to be reserved, but Mahmud never cast off the veil even before his most intimate companions. He had no favourites in state affairs. The play-things of his idle hours were not allowed to meddle in matters too high for their understanding. The devotion with which he was served by his officers did not evoke an equal confidence on his side. Even towards his all but indispensable wazir, the great Khwaja Ahmad bin Hasan Maimandi, his attitude was one of distant respect. The smaller fry were mere pawns on the chess-board whom the master-mind moved hither and thither at will.

The Sultan's personal faith, as distinct from the policy of his government, is a matter of interesting speculation. Contemporary gossip credited him with a disbelief in the Day of Judgment and in the Tradition (Hadis), dear to the Muslim priests of all ages, "that the scholars (ulama) are the successors of the prophets."* The appearance of the Holy Prophet in a dream was said to have put his mind at rest; and Mahmud, like most Muslim kings, never failed to pay a visit to saints of renown, though with the exception of Shaikh Abul Hasan Kharqani none seems to have influenced him deeply. But his outlook on life was essentially secular,

---

* His mind was also clouded by a dark suspicion that Subuktigin was not his real father. While returning to his palace one night, the Sultan ordered his golden lamp to be given to a poor student, whom he saw reading in the light of a shop. 'Son of Subuktigin,' the Prophet appeared to him in a dream that night, "May God honour thee in both the worlds as thou hast honoured my successor!" The Sultan's three doubts were thus removed.

and he was too conscious of his position as the head of the state to allow priesthood to become supreme. His persecution of the 'heretics,' apart from the pressing demand of the 'orthodox', may have been due to his conviction that their 'immoral' doctrines would shake the foundations on which Muslim society was based ; and greed for money and power, not an enlightened desire for the spread of Islam, was the motive of his Indian campaigns. A deep and inspiring faith in the one and the unseen God, Mahmud certainly had, and it brought him the consolation he needed. Apart from that, it would be safe to assume that he shared the rationalistic tendencies of his friend, Ahmad Husain bin Mikal (Hasnak), who refused to believe in any mystifying nonsense, and the firmness with which he protected Hasnak from the Caliph's wrath confirms this view. The private life of the Sultan certainly shows him to be anything but the paragon of virtue idolised by Muslim fanatics. He was morally neither better nor worse than most of the princes who preceded and followed him. He shared their fondness for war and wine and women as well as their appreciation of poetry and music. He was not above quarrelling with his officers for the possession of Turkish slaves, and scandal, which may or may not be true, credited him with illegitimate children.* But the prime concern of the * Ahmad Nialtigin, Commander-in-Chief of Lahore in Masud's reign, was considered to be an illegitimate son of Mahmud. "People used to tell stories about his birth, his mother and Amir Mahmud. There was certainly a friendly relation between the king and his mother—but God knows the truth." (Baihaqi, E. & D. Vol. ii, p. 122).

---

historian is not the private life of Mahmud but the character and value of his work.

Amir Nuh of Bokhara died in the same year as Subuktigin. His son, Mansur, appointed one Begtuzun governor of Khorasan, and while Mahmud was fighting with Ismail, Begtuzun established himself at Naishapur. Mahmud's protests were disregarded, and when he marched on Naishapur, Mansur hastened to defend it. Mahmud was more than a match for the Samanid king but he refrained from pushing matters to extremes on account of the blame that would attach to him for defying his overlord. But as fate would have it, Begtuzun, joined by the ever-mischievous Faiq, captured and blinded Mansur and placed his brother, Abdul Malik, a boy of tender years, on the Samanid throne. Mahmud's hands were now free. He cleared Khorasan of the enemy and Abdul Malik fled to Bokhara. But I-lak Khan of Kashghar, who had been watching the course of events from beyond the Jaxartes, marched on Bokhara and put the Samanid kingdom to an end in 999 A. D. I-lak Khan and Mahmud congratulated each other and divided the Samanid kingdom between themselves with the Oxus as the boundary line. This political alliance was cemented by a family alliance and the intercourse of the two kingdoms resulted in the conversion of a large number of Tartars to Islam.

Towards the end of year 999 A.D. Mahmud, the first Muslim ruler to be credited with the title of Sultan, received a robe of honour from the Caliph with the title of 'Aminul Millat' and 'Yaminuddoulah.' He now stood in the place of the Samanids, his former overlords, in direct subordination to the Caliph, and recognised the duties of his new position by taking a vow to wage a 'Holy War' against the Hindus every year. Though he invaded India only seventeen times in the thirty years of life yet left to him, it must be acknowledged that the vow was fulfilled in the spirit in which it was made.

(1) In 1000 A.D. Mahmud crossed the Indian frontier but retreated after capturing (1) Frontier towns a few forts. (1000).

(2) Next year (1001—1002) he moved again and pitched his tents before Peshawar (2) Peshawar with ten thousand horse while Rai and Waihind Jaipal marched against him with (1001-1002). twelve thousand horse, thirty thousand foot and three hundred elephants. On 28th November, 1001, the armies fell on each other and 'did justice to their traditions of warlike courage.*' But Rai Jaipal was captured with fifteen royal princes and five thousand Hindus died on the battle-field. Mahmud marched on and captured Jaipal's capital, Waihind (or Und), where some Hindus had * Winter was the campaigning season in India. Mahmud generally left Ghaznin in autumn (i.e. the end of the rainy season), and after spending the winter in India, returned to Ghaznin by the beginning of the summer. His campaigns, consequently, have to be indicated by two years of the Christian era.

---

collected together for a second battle.* Jaipal and other prisoners were released on payment of tribute, but the defeated Rai, in conformity with the custom of his people, transferred his kingdom to Anandpal and ended his life on a funeral pyre.

(3) During the next two years Mahmud was busy with the western affairs of his king-

(3) Biji Rai of dom and the conquest of Siestan. In Bhera (1006— the autumn of 1006 A.D. he crossed 1007). the Indus for the first time and appeared before Bhera on the bank of the Jhelum. Biji Rai of Bhera, who possessed 'elephants headstrong as Satan' and had never cared to pay homage either to Subuktigin or Jaipal, came out of the fort and offered battle. The struggle continued desperately for three days and the condition of the Muslim army became critical. But on the fourth day, after the battle had raged indecisively from morning to noon, a desperate charge led by Mahmud in person broke the Hindu centre and Biji Rai fled to the fort with his broken columns. Mahmud sat down to besiege it. The Rai, 'a prey to perplexity and fear,' fled from the fort at night, but was surrounded by a number of Mahmud's soldiers and escaped an inglorious captivity by plunging a dagger into his breast. The city of Bhera and its dependent territory was annexed to the Ghaznavide empire and

---

* "This is a place of considerable importance on the western bank of the Indus, about fifteen miles above Attock, on the old high-road from Lahore to Peshawar, and only three marches from the latter". (E & D. Vol ii, p 438).

Mahmud returned with two hundred and eighty elephants and other spoils.*

(4) The province of Sindh, conquered by Mohamad bin Qasim in the beginning of the eighth century, had been converted to the Carmathian heresy about a century before Mahmud. According to the ideas of the age 'heretics' were as worthy objects of Holy War as 'unbelievers'. Shaikh Hamid Lodi, ruler of the Upper Sindh, had kept Subuktigin pleased with occasional presents but his grandson, Abul Fath Daud, left the cautious policy of his predecessor. Fearing that the fall of Bhara would leave Multan open to Mahmud's attack, he made an ineffectual attempt to come to Biji Rai's assistance—'an act totally beyond the bounds of propriety and reason.' Mahmud connived at it for a time but next year (1005-1006) he marched on a holy campaign against the Carmathian Daud. Daud in desperation appealed to Anandpal, son of Jaipal, and Anandpal made a bold attempt to block Mahmud's progress. But Mahmud, not unwilling to obtain 'two paradises', turned aside to fight the Hindu before he struck at the 'heretic'. Anandpal's officers were driven back, the Rai himself was pursued over 'hill and dale' up to the Chenab and the path to Multan was cleared. Daud, who was in no condition to fight an open battle, shut himself up in the fort, and after a siege of seven days promised to recant from his heresy to the religious law (shariat) of the orthodox and to pay an annual tribute of 20,000 dirhams. But the treaty was hardly concluded when Mahmud heard of the danger threatening his capital and marched back in desperate haste to protect the home-lands of his empire from the Eastern Turks.

---

*"Behra lies on the west bank of the Jhelum, under the Salt Range. It bears evident marks of great antiquity, and has on the opposite side of the river the extensive ruins of Burarie, above Ahmadabad, which strike every beholder with astonishment". (E. & D. Vol. ii p. 122).

I-lak Khan and Mahmud had made an alliance in 999 A.D. on the basis of an equitable division of the Samanid kingdom. I-lak Khan's invasion of Khorasan—Battle of the Oxus. But this did not prevent the Khan from casting longing looks on the fertile lands on the other side of the Oxus. In 1004—1005 A.D. when Mahmud was away at Multan, I-lak Khan found his opportunity. He overran Khorasan and Balkh, and Arsalan Hajib, Mahmud's governor of Herat, was forced to withdraw to Ghaznin. But the simple-minded I-lak had calculated without the host. Mahmud reappeared at Ghaznin long before he was expected; his boundless energy revived the failing courage of his officers; the army was reorganised with remarkable speed; and Mahmud faced the invader with a powerful force near Balkh. The careful way in which Mahmud attended to the disposition of his columns shows the terror his opponent inspired. At first the Turkish attack seemed to carry all before it, but in the end the Ghaznavides, led by the Sultan in person, succeeded in driving the enemy away. Mahmud pursued the flying enemy for two stages, but the severity of the winter made a campaign in the desolate region of Trans-Oxania impossible, while an unexpected revolt drew his attention to India once more.

(5) Bhera was the only territory Mahmud possessed on the eastern side of the Indus.

(5) Sukhpal While returning from Multan he had assigned the governorship of Bhera (1005). to Sukhpal (Newasa Shah), a son of Anandpal who had been converted to Islam. Seeing Mahmud absorbed in a deadly struggle with the Turks, Sukhpal returned to the faith of his ancestors and drove away Mahmud's officers. The Sultan started for Bhera after the battle of Balkh, but before he could reach the scene of action, the frontier amirs captured Sukhpal and brought him captive to the royal camp. He was forced to give up the 400,000 dirhams he had accumulated and was imprisoned for life.

(6) The strategical importance of Bhera explains the rebellion of Sukhpal as well as Mahmud's anxiety to recapture it before

(6) Anandpal and the Hindu Confederacy— Second battle of Waihind: Nagarkot (1008-1009). it could be garrisoned by a strong Indian force. From his footing on the Jhelum he could strike either at Multan in the south or at Anandpal in the east. Multan was lying prostrate at his feet but not much was to be got out of that poor and harassed kingdom. The gates of Hindustan were in Anandpal's possession. Mahmud's relation with that prince were already strained. Anandpal cherished the 'bitterest hatred' towards the Mussalmans ever since the capture of his son, Sukhpal, at Peshawar (1001-1002). His attempt to prevent Mahmud's march on Multan had furnished the latter with a technical cause for declaring war, but when Mahmud was fighting with his back to the wall against the Kashghar army, Anandpal sent him a heroic offer of assistance in a spirit which won the approbation of the philosopher, Alberuni. "I have learned," ran Anandpal's letter, "that the Turks have rebelled against you and are spreading in Khorasan. If you wish, I shall come to you with 5,000 horsemen, 10,000 foot soldiers, and 100 elephants, or, if you wish, I shall send you my son with double the number. In acting thus, I do not speculate on the impression this will make on you. I have been conquered by you and, therefore, I do not wish that another man should conquer you." The impression created by the letter may, none the less, have had a share in maintaining peace for the next three years. But so long as Anandpal remained strong and independent, a permanent peace between him and Mahmud was impossible. The Sultan had as yet only touched the fringe of a continental country, and the spoils he had obtained were insignificant. Beyond the Sutlej lay the temples to which generations of pious Hindus had dedicated their wealth. It was necessary for Mahmud to strike down Anandpal, if he was ever to possess himself of the treasures of the Punjab and the prosperous Trans-Gangetic plain. Conversely, the Rais of Hindustan could not fail to recognise the importance of Anandpal as a buffer between them and the aggressive kingdom of Ghaznin. So long as the struggle had been waged beyond the Indus, they could afford to look on unconcerned and leave the Rai of Lahore to protect his non-Indian subjects. The arrogance of Biji Rai made them indifferent to his fate, nor did anyone, save Anandpal, feel it his duty to come to the help of the Multan 'heretics.' But now the deluge that 'took no account of heights and depths' had reached their sacred frontiers and was threatening to put an end to their fratricidal warfare, their local independence and their somnolent ease.

The importance of the struggle was well understood on both sides when Mahmud marched against Anandpal as the end of the rainy season, 1008 A.D. Anandpal appealed to the other Rais and their response certainly showed that the national spirit of the country, though disorganised, was not dead. The rulers of Ujjain, Gwalior, Kalanjar, Kannauj, Delhi and Ajmere marched to the Punjab with their troops. Help came from every side. Even 'the infidel Gakkhars' crowded under Anandpal's banner. A patriotic breeze swept over the towns and hamlets of Hindustan calling its men to arms. 'Hindu women sold their jewels and sent the money from distant parts to be used against the Mussalmans.' Their poorer sisters, who had no jewels to sell, worked feverishly at the 'spinning-wheel or as hired labourers to be able to send something to the men of the army.' All that excites a nation to heroic deeds was there — the preservation of an ancient and ever-living civilisation, the sacred temple and the no less sacred hearth. Yet the patriotic spirit of the people was paralysed by suspicious created by years of civil war; the Rais were doubtful of each other's intentions and their followers shared their doubts. Anandpal was important enough to take precedence but not strong enough to issue orders, and the Indian army was directed by no single commander on the field of battle. But discipline reigned supreme in the camp of the warrior-statesman of Ghaznin. His troops, more racially heterogenous than the citizen-mob opposed to them, had been welded into one by years of continuous campaigning; and unlike their Rajput opponents, they knew their master and were not liable to panic. Even so the scales hung evenly.

Anandpal marched bravely to Waihind (Und) with the largest Indian army Mahmud was ever destined to face. The Sultan, whose extraordinary intuition never played him false, saw that the Indians would 'fight with devotion' and was more cautious than usual. He dug a trench on both sides of his camp, and reluctant to begin the engagement, sat facing the enemy for forty days. But hourly the strength of the Indian army increased with new reinforcements, and Mahmud, afraid lest further delay should enable Anandpal to overpower the Ghaznavide veterans through sheer force of numbers, sent forward a thousand archers to commence the engagement. But almost immediately his calculations were thrown into disorder by thirty thousand Gakkhars, 'who with bare heads and feet, crossed the trenches in the first attack, broke into the camp from both sides, and falling on the Muslim cavalry with desperate courage, cut down man and horse, so that in the twinkling of an eye three or four thousand Mussalmans had tasted the wine of martyrdom.' Mahmud was desperately trying to clear his camp of the Gakkhars when a whim of the god of battles decided the struggle in his favour. Anandpal's elephant, frightened by the explosions of naphtha, fled away from the field of battle and the Indian soldiers concluded this to be a base desertion of their cause by the 'premier king of Hindustan'. A general rout ensued, and the Ghaznavides pursued the flying enemy for two days and nights. The Indian losses were not more than eight thousand, but the phenomenon of a multitudinous army breaking up from sheer lack of internal cohesion and flying away before an enemy not strong enough to meet it in the open field was thoroughly demoralising. Thus the only national opposition ever offered to Mahmud ended in a storm of mutual recriminations. Henceforth he had no Indian confederacy to fear, and the Rais were one after another overpowered and deprived of all their valuables in a struggle which the superior generalship of the Ghaznavide never left in doubt.

Mahmud took advantage of the disorganisation of his opponents to make a dash for the temple of Nagarkot (Kangra), known as the Fort of Bhim, situated on the top of a hill on the upper Bias.* He had

---

*"That Nagarkot is the same as Kot Kangra can admit of no doubt, for the name Nagarkot is still used. The impassable waters which surround it are the Ban-ganga and the Biyah (Bias). The town of Bhim, which is a mile from the fort, is now on a spot called Bhawan, which means a temple already penetrated as far as the Chenab and the new expedition only took him twelve marches further. The Rajputs of the place had gone to fight at Waihind and the quickness of Mahmud's movements left them behind. The Brahmans, who alone were there, opened their gates after a siege of seven days and allowed Mahmud to visit the fort with a few companions. The temple contained more wealth than existed in the treasury of any king and the fine exacted by the Sultan from the helpless Brahmans was immense—'700,000 gold dinars, 700 maunds of gold and silver vessels, 200 maunds of pure gold, 2,000 maunds of unpurified silver and 20 maunds of various jewels which had been collected together from the time of Bhim.' It was the Sultan's first great find and naturally whetted his appetite for more.

(7) Anandpal had lost his reputation but not his power at the second battle of Waihind and the Sultan's next move (1009-1010) was a de-

(7) Demonstration rather than a campaign against the confederacy (1009-1010). He is said to have marched in the direction of Gujrat, but his real object was to terrorise Anand-pal into receding from the brittle alliance in which his position was already uncomfortable. The Sultan 'urged his horses over ground, hard and soft, put to the sword the vagabonds of the country raised to a Sakti, or female diety, and Bhim is probably a mistake arising from its presumed foundation by the heroic Bhim". (E. & D. Vol. ii, p. 445). Most medieval temples were fortified and so were most towns and villages.

---

and with delay and circumspection proceeded to accomplish his design.' The friends of God 'did not fail of their object after having committed slaughter in every hill and valley'; for Anandpal's messengers waited on the Sultan at Ghaznin with offers of peace and 'their best wishes for his future prosperity.' The Rai's mind was made up. 'He had witnessed the calamities which had inflicted ruin on his country and subjects in consequence of his contests with the Sultan' and decided to desert the confederacy which had left him to his fate. Peace was rapidly concluded. Anandpal promised an annual tribute of thirty elephants and offered two thousand men for service at the Sultan's court. The way to the heart of India was now open. Mahmud could march over the friendly territory of Anandpal and strike at the Rais beyond.*

Conquest of Ghor (1010). Mahmud utilised the summer of 1010 A.D. for bringing some presumptuous inhabitants of Ghor to a sense of their insignificance. The Ghorians, ten thousand in number, dug a trench round their camp and fought bravely from morning till noon. But the stout-hearted hill-men were no match for the greatest military genius of the age. Mahmud lured the simple folks out of their safe position by a feigned retreat and annihilated them in the plain below. Mohammad bin *Utbi's account of the campaign is obscure in its geographical references. The real object, undoubtedly, was to frighten Anandpal into an alliance, and this interpretation of Mahmud's intention harmonises well with the treaty described by Utbi later. The best wishes for the Sultan's 'future prosperity' apparently implied willingness to allow him to march across the Punjab.

---

Suri, one of the chiefs of Ghor, was so heart-broken that he sucked a poisoned jewel when brought a captive to Mahmud's court and died immediately. The princes of Ghor remained subordinate to Ghaznin till the time of Alauddin Jahansoz.

(8) Next winter (1010-1011) Mahmud marched against the Kingdom of Multan, which had been long waiting for the day of its extinction. The city was captured 'through terror and force' and Mahmud pleased the 'orthodox' by slaying a large number of Carmathian 'heretics' and cutting off the hands and feet of many others. Daud ended his life as a prisoner in a Ghorian fort.

(9) In 1011-1012 Mahmud, who had heard that Thaneswar, owing to its idol, Chakrasvamin, was as holy in the eyes of the Hindus as Mecca in the eyes of the Mussalmans, marched thither for the treasures a place so ancient was sure to possess.* Anandpal in consonance with his treaty, provided all the 'requisites of hospitality' by ordering his merchants and shopkeepers to look after the needs of the commissariat and his brother accompanied the Sultan with two thousand men. Mahmud refrained from injuring the *Utbi places the Thaneswar campaign after the Nardin (Ninduna) expedition, and Elliot follows him in the error. This is clearly wrong. The Thaneswar campaign was undertaken during the life of Anandpal; consequently, the Ninduna campaign, which was directed against his son, Trilocanpal, could not have preceded it. Ferishta adheres to the correct order.

---

Rai's territory but refused his suggestion that an indemnity and a yearly tribute should be accepted from the people of Thaneswar, because 'my royal wish is to remove the practice of idolatory totally from all the lands of Hindustan.' Too late in the day, the Rai of Thaneswar reflected on the necessity of an Indian confederacy. "If we do not raise a dam to keep off this deluge," he wrote to his brother Rais, "it will soon spread over the whole plain and submerge all kingdoms, great and small." This was true enough. But Mahmud reached Thaneswar before the clumsy machinery of a confederacy could stir and the Rai fled in despair. Mahmud collected the treasures and broke the idols of the undefended city at leisure.* He wished to march further east, but as such a movement would have left him entirely at Anandpal's mercy, he accepted the advice of his officers and turned back with a fabulous number of 'servants and slaves.' Mahmud's army, like the army of most Asiatic conquerors, was essentially a cosmopolitan institution, kept intact by its esprit de corps and loyalty to its master's person. Mahmud took good military men into his service wherever he found them. Indians, who were, of course, non-Muslims, were freely enrolled, and at a later stage were formed into a separate regiment commanded by a Hindu general, who enjoyed a very high status among his fellow-officers.

In 1012-1013 Mahmud's officers conquered Gharjistan, and the Sultan compelled the Caliph, Al Qadir

---

*The Chakrasvamin was a bronze image of Vishnu, which held the weapon, Chakra, in one of its hands. It was taken to Ghaznin and thrown into the hippodrome of the city (Alberuni).

Mahmud and the Caliph. Billah, to hand over to him those districts of Khorasan which were still in his hands. But the Caliph stoutly refused Mahmud's further demand that he should be given Samarkand also. "I will do no such thing," he replied, "and if you take possession of Samarkand without my permission, I will disgrace you before the whole world." Mahmud was furious. "Do you wish me to come to the capital of the Caliphate with a thousand elephants," he threatened the Caliph's ambassador, "in order to lay it waste and bring its earth on the backs of my elephants to Ghaznin?" But the policy of plundering the centres of Muslim and Hindu civilisations simultaneously was too bold even for Mahmud, and he had to apologise humbly to the power which even in its hour of weakness could have shattered the moral foundations of the Ghaznavide kingdom. But none the less he established his power over Samarkand.

(10) Meanwhile Anandpal's death had upset Mahmud's calculations in India.

(10) Trilocanpal and Bhimpal—Ninduna (1013-1014). The new Rai, Trilocanpal, unlike his father, was well inclined towards the Mussalmans, but he seems to have been a weak man and the direction of affairs came into the hands of his son, known to contemporaries as 'Nidar' (Fearless) Bhim, who stoutly reversed the policy of his grandfather and put an end to the Ghaznavide alliance. Mahmud was once more forced to fight the kingdom of Lahore in order to keep the road to Hindustan open. He started from Ghaznin in the autumn of 1013 but snow began to fall before he reached the Indian frontier, and it was found necessary to go into winter-quarters. With the spring the Ghaznavides moved forward once more, 'ascending the hills like mountain-goats and descending them like torrents of water.' Nidar Bhim fortified himself in the Margala Pass,* which was narrow, precipitous and steep, but on the arrival of his vassals he came down and offered battle. The Ghaznavides won after a severe contest. Bhim threw a garrison into the fort of Ninduna on the hill of Balanath and fled to the Pass of Kashmir. Mahmud, who now seems to have made up his mind to annex the Punjab, reduced Ninduna, and after placing a garrison in it, pushed on in pursuit of Bhim. But the elusive hero could not be captured and the Sultan turned back from the foot of the Kashmir hills.

(11) Next year (1015-1016) the Sultan again attempted to force his way through the Kashmir Pass. But the fortress of Lohkot defied all his efforts. Reinforcements reached the garrison from Kashmir ; snow began to fall ; and for the first time Mahmud retired discomfited from before an Indian fort. While retreating he lost a large number of his men in the floods of the Jhelum, extricated himself with difficulty from the watery peril, and returned to Ghaznin 'without having achieved anything.'

---

*"The action which preceded the capture of Ninduna appears to have been fought at the Margala Pass, which answers well to the description given of it by Utbi. The hill of Balanath is a conspicuous mountain over-hanging the Jhelum and now generally called Tilla, which means a hill. It is still occasionally called Balanath, and there is a famous jogi establishment on its highest summit, of great repute and resorted to by members of that fraternity from the most distant parts of India." (E & D).

This failure in the east was compensated by an acquisition in the north. Mahmud's sister had been married to Abul Abbas Mamun, the ruler of Khwarazm. But the bride had hardly been in her new home for a year, when Abul Abbas was slain by rebels. Mahmud marched forth to revenge his brother-in-law's death, defeated the rebel army before the famous fortress of Hazar Asp and appointed his general, Altuntash, governor of the newly conquered territory with the title of 'Khwarazm Shah.'

(12) Towards the end of the rainy season, 1018, Mahmud at last started on that expedition to the Trans-Gangetic plain of which he had been dreaming for years. His regular army of one hundred thousand was strengthened by twenty thousand volunteers from Khorasan and Turkestan. The omens were favourable. The Hindu confederacy had disappeared and none of the Rais was strong enough to oppose Mahmud single-handed. He had established a reputation for generalship, which none could question, and everyone knew that his methods were thorough. Trilocanpal and Nidar Bhim, though still eluding their pursuers, were driven beyond the Punjab, while Sangram, Rai of Kashmir, made peace with the Sultan and led the van of the invading troops. The Ghaznavides marched through forests in which 'even winds lose their way,' forded the five rivers of the Punjab, and crossing the Jamna on December 2nd, moved against Barran (Bulandshahr) 'like the waves of the sea.' But Rai Hardat solved the problem by coming out of his city with ten thousand men who, either from policy or conviction, proclaimed 'their anxiety for conversion and their rejection of idols'.* This 'conversion' saved the citizens and Mahmud marched down the Jamna to Mahaban. Its ruler, Rai Kulchand, who had established a reputation for invincibility in local warfare, drew up his army in the midst of a thick forest. But Mahmud penetrated the forest 'like a comb through a head of hair' and scattered the Mahaban army. Many of the fugitives were drowned in the attempt to cross the Jamna, and the valiant Kulchand escaped the disgrace of captivity by slaying his wife and son and then plunging the dagger into his own breast.

On the other side of the Jamna lay the ancient and famous city of Mathura, the birth-place of Krishna-Basdeo. 'The wall of the city was constructed of hard stone, and the two gates, which opened upon the river flowing under the city, were erected on strong and lofty foundations to protect them against the floods of the river and rains. On both sides of the river *Nizamuddin and Ferishta by mistake attribute this conversion to the Rai of Kannauj, and they also mention Kannauj as the first city attacked by Mahmud. They have also confused the line of Mahmud's march and make him cross and recross the Jumna many times over. I have followed Utbi's contemporary account which is free from the geographical blunders of later writers.

---

there were a thousand houses, to which idol temples were attached, all strengthened from top to bottom by rivets of iron, and all made of masonry work, and opposite to them were other buildings, supported on broad wooden pillars to give them strength. In the middle of the city there was a temple larger and firmer than the rest, which can neither be described nor painted; the inhabitants said it had been built not by men but by genii.' 'In population and splendid edifices the city of Mathura was unrivalled; the human tongue cannot describe the wonderful things it contained.'

But no attempt was made to defend this inimitable monument of Hindu art when Mahmud crossed the Jamna, and the inhabitants, anxious to save their skins, left him to work havoc with their sacred inheritance. 'The Sultan gave orders that all the temples should be burnt with naphtha and fire and levelled with the ground.' Envy rather than fanaticism seems to have been the predominant motive in Mahmud's artistic mind. "In this city," he wrote to the nobles of Ghaznin in praise of what his vandalism had destroyed, "there are a thousand towering palaces, most of them constructed of huge stones. The temples are more than can be counted. Anyone wishing to construct the like will have to spend a hundred thousand thousand dinars and employ the most skilled workmen for two hundred years." As a financial venture the expedition succeeded beyond all expectations—98,300 misqals of gold were obtained from idols of that metal; the silver idols, two hundred in number, could not be weighed 'without being broken and put into scales';

two rubies valued at 5,000 dinars, a sapphire weighing 450 misqals, and in addition such other spoils as a rich and prosperous city could not fail to yield. A few miles from Mathura, is the historic town of Brindaban, where seven proud forts raised their heads to the sky by the riverside. The owner of the forts fled at Mahmud's approach and he took from them all that they contained.*

The Sultan then left behind him the greater part of his army, which was too large for the rapid movements he desired, and proceeded against Kannauj with his best veterans. This ancient city had risen to prominence as the capital of Harshavardhana; it was defended by seven forts washed by the Ganges and contained about ten thousand temples, great and small. The Rais of Kannauj had not been slow in helping Jaipal and Anandpal against the aggression of Ghaznin, but the reigning prince, Rajyapala,† fled away at Mahmud's approach. Most of the

---

\*The situation of Mathura by the side of the Jamna is charming beyond description, and walking by the river-side on a summer evening under the guidance of its leading citizen, Pandit Radha Krishna, I could just have a dream of what the place might have been in the days of its glory. The road to Brindaban, so famous in the legend of Lord Krishna, still retains its poetic associations. Even to-day a visitor, with eyes that can see, will find much to captivate him in the work of later artists—and the landscape is as beautiful as it was in the days of the Mahabharata. ( A misqal =  $1\frac{3}{7}$  drams. )

†Utbi calls him Rai Jaipal, which is equivalent to Rajyapala, but he is not to be identified with Rai Jaipal of Lahore, who citizens followed the example of their Rai, and Kannauj repeated the story of Mathura. Mahmud captured the seven forts in a single day and plundered the undefended city. Further down the Ganges, near the modern Fatehpur, was Rai Chandal Bhor's fort of Asni. Chandal Bhor, who had been busy in fighting the Rai of Kannauj, also fled and Asni was plundered. Then proceeding southwards Mahmud came across the fort of Munj* (Mujhavan) the garrison of which, 'independent as head-strong camels,' fought like 'obstinate satans,' and when all hope had disappeared, threw their women and children into the fire and died fighting to the last man. The next objective was Chand Rai of Sharwa†, who had been harassing the unfortunate had been dead for years. But further on Utbi speaks of Pur-i Jaipal's war with Chand Rai. Pur-i Jaipal is not Anandpal but Trilocanpal, whom Alberuni calls Tarojanpal, for which Pur-i Jaipal (Jaipal's son) is a natural misreading. Much confusion has, however, been caused by later historians. Ferishta gives the name of Korah to the Rai of Kannauj. V. A. Smith transfers the name of Trilocanpal to Rajyapal's son. It is useless to mention what a mess of names and places other scholars have been responsible for. But the list of the Hindu Shahi dynasty given by Alberuni, and enumerated in a foregoing note, settles the question definitely. The other difficulties will be removed if the 'Pur-i Jaipal' of Utbi is read as Trilocanpal, and not as Jaipal's son.

(Continued)

*Utbi calls Munj 'the fort of Brahmans' and places it before the capture of Asni. This seems highly improbable as Mahmud would come across the fort only when marching against Sharwa. Utbi would seem to take him to Bundelkhand twice.

† 'Either Seunra on the Ken between Kalanjar and Banda, or Sriwagarh, on the Pahonj, not far from Kunch' (E. & D., Vol. ii. p. 659).

Trilocanpal of Lahore in the east while Mahmud had been pressing him so hard on the other side. To prevent this suicidal strife, Trilocanpal had even sought his enemy's daughter in marriage for his son, but Nidar Bhim was imprisoned by his father-in-law when he went to bring his bride and the strife continued. As Mahmud marched eastwards, Trilocanpal fled before him and found a refuge with Chandai Bhor of Asni. Common misfortunes at last created some sympathy between the dynasties of Lahore and Sharwa, and Nidar Bhim, who seems to have regained his freedom, sent Chand Rai a piece of friendly advice. "Sultan Mahmud is not like the rulers of Hind. He is not a leader of black men. Armies fly away before the very name of him and his father. I regard his bridle as much stronger than yours, for he never contents himself with one blow of the sword, nor does his army content itself with one hill out of a whole range. If you wish for your own safety, you will remain in concealment." The suggestion was adopted. Chand Rai fled to the hills with his elephants and treasures. But Mahmud captured Sharwa and then hastened after the flying Rai, whom he managed to discover and defeat on the night of January 6, 1019. The campaign beyond Kannauj had not taken more than seventeen days, when Mahmud turned back with Chand Rai's much coveted elephants.

Mahmud's exploits could not fail to captivate the imagination of his co-religionists. Neither Alexander, the Great, nor the heroes of the Shah Namah had anything so romantic to their credit. A mysterious wonderland had been explored. Beyond the thick and impenetrable frontier forest, beyond the five great rivers of the Punjab, the muizzin's call to prayer had resounded over many a desolate wilderness and amidst the conflagrations of many a hamlet and town. The success was duly celebrated. The Caliph summoned a special darbar to receive Mahmud's message of victory. Accounts of the expedition were read out from the pulpits, and pious Mussalmans fondly imagined that 'what the Companions of the Blessed Prophet had done in Arabia, Persia, Syria and Iraq, Mahmud has achieved in Hindustan'. Nothing could have been farther from the truth. He had rolled in immense riches but had only disgusted the Indians with his faith. The plundered people were not likely to think well of Islam when it came to them in the shape of the Ghaznavide conqueror and left behind it an everlasting story of plundered temples, desolated cities and trampled crops. As a faith Islam had been morally disgraced, not elevated, by the Ghaznavide's achievement. The booty amounted to 3,000,000 dirhams. "The number of prisoners may be conceived from the fact that each of them was sold for two to three dirhams. These were afterwards taken to Ghaznin and merchants came from distant cities to purchase them, so that the countries of Mawarun Nahr, Iraq and Khorasan were filled with them, and the fair and the dark, the rich and the poor, were commingled in one common slavery." It was perhaps the remembrance of Mathura which led Mahmud to build a Juma mosque and a college at Ghaznin after his return. The amirs followed his example and Ghaznin was soon adorned with palatial buildings.

(13) Two distant storm-centres still troubled Mahmud's mind. Trilocanpal and his son, Nidar Bhim, had been defeated but not crushed and were still in the Doab. In Bundelkhand Rai Nanda* of Kalanjar had also adopted a hostile attitude. After Mahmud's withdrawal from the country, he had marched with the Rai of Gwalior against Rajyapala, and either as a punishment for the latter's cowardly attitude towards Mahmud, or on account of some other forgotten grievance, had put him to death. An alliance between Trilocanpal and Nanda was natural. But it was not Mahmud's principle to let the grass grow under his feet. He determined to crush the possibility of another Hindu confederacy, and in the winter of 1019-20 he again crossed 'the five and the two rivers.' Trilocanpal withdrew beyond the lower Rahib (Ramganga), but Mahmud's officers forced their passage across the river by swimming on inflated skins (mashaks), and after scattering Trilocanpal's army, plundered the newly built town of Bari,† which Rajyapala had built after the destruction of Kannauj.

---

*V. A. Smith calls him 'Ganda.'

†'Kanoj lies to the west of the Ganges, a very large town, but most of it is now in ruins since the capital has been transferred thence to the city of Bari, east of the Ganges. Between the two towns is a distance of three to four day's marches.' (Alberuni, vol. i. p. 199). The battle must have taken place not far from where the Ramganga falls into the Ganges. V. A. Smith's identification of the defeated prince with the son of Rajyapal is a mistake. Utbi's account leaves no doubt that Trilocanpal, son of Anandpal, is meant.

Whether to help Trilocanpal, or with the intention of fighting the invader single-handed, Nanda had already started from Kalanjar with 36,000 horse, 40,000 or 50,000 foot and 640 elephants. The Sulian also moved forward. It is difficult to say where the two met, but on surveying the enemy troops from an eminence, the Sultan regretted the dangerous expedition he had undertaken. The Rai was even more afraid, for that very night a great terror took possession of his mind, and he left all his baggage and fled. Mahmud, after making sure that the Hindus had not attempted an ambush, plundered the deserted camp. Five hundred and eighty elephants, in addition to the two hundred and seventy obtained from Trilocanpal, fell into his hands. But the Punjab was still unsubdued. Mahmud's position in a far off territory with the armies of Nanda yet undefeated was extremely critical, and afraid lest his retreat should be cut off, he marched back rapidly to Ghaznin.

(14) The conquest of India was not Mahmud's aim.

Nevertheless the Doab campaigns had brought him far from his base, and he saw that if his armies were to penetrate to such distant territories as Bundelkhand, he must at least have the Punjab under his complete control. In 1021 he started from Ghaznin with 'a large number of carpenters, blacksmiths and stone-cutters' with the definite intention of establishing a regular government over the Punjab. The first objective were the frontier tribes of Swat, Bajaur and Kafiristan, who had 'not yet put the yoke of Islam round their necks' and worshipped the Buddha in the form of the lion (Sakya Sinha). The inhabitants were subdued and converted, and a fort was built in their territory.* Marching further, Mahmud repeated his former attempt, and tasted again the bitterness of his former failure, at the foot of Lohkot, the impregnable fortress of the Kashmir Pass. But the Punjab was cleared and Mahmud forsook phundering and established a regular administration. A reliable governor was placed at Lahore, the rest of the province was assigned to various officers and garrisons were established at important points. Trilochanpal had died soon after the battle of the Rahib; Nidar Bhim fled to the Rai of Ajmere and died in 1026. With him the House of Kallur came to an end. A contemporary Muslim scholar, untouched by the passions and prejudices of those around him, supplied a befitting epitaph to the dynasty that had ended with such a hero: "They were men of noble sentiment and noble bearing. In all their grandeur, they never slackened in the desire of doing what is good and right."†

---

*The Persian chronicles speak of Qirat and Nardin (or Nur), which Elliot, on the authority of Alberuni, identifies with the Nur and Kira rivers that fall into the river Kabul. Doubtless the frontier tribes are meant. Plenty of Buddhist remains survive to explain the worship of lions (E. and I. vol. ii., p. 444). "On breaking a great temple situated there, the ornamented figure of a lion came out of it, which according to the belief of the Hindus was four thousand years old." (Ferishta). The carpenters, blacksmiths and stone-cutters were brought for the construction of forts at strategic points on the frontier and in the Punjab.

†Alber uni, Vol. II, p. 13.

(15) Next year (1022-1023) Mahmud once more marched by way of Lahore against Gwalior Nanda. But he had taken all that and Kalanjar was best from the lands in the direction of his march, and was not inclined to push matters to extremes.

Gwalior was invested, but the Rai obtained peace by a present of thirty-five elephants. Even Nanda, when besieged in Kalanjar, found the Sultan reasonable. A present of three hundred elephants, whom the Rai turned unceremoniously out of the fort for the Turks to 'capture and ride on', served to create good will, which was further strengthened by some Hindi verses written by the Rai in the Sultan's praise. All the scholars of Hind, Persia and Arabia present in Mahmud's camp applauded Nanda's composition, and Mahmud sent him an order (firman) confirming him in the possession of his fifteen forts. Nanda acknowledged the favour by a present of money and costly jewels, and the Sultan turned back from the most eastern point he was ever destined to reach.

On returning to Ghaznin, the Sultan held a muster of his forces. Apart from the troops Mahmud in Trans-Oxania (1023). stationed in the provinces, the royal army at Ghaznin amounted to 54,000 horse and 1,300 elephants,* and with this he crossed the Oxus and proceeded to overawe the chiefs of Trans-Oxania. Ali Tigin, the recalcitrant ruler of Samarkand, was brought in chains

---

*The total number of elephants possessed by Mahmud is said to have been 2,500.

before the Sultan and sent as a prisoner to India. The smaller chiefs crowded to offer their allegiance. Even Yusuf Qadr Khan, brother of the late I-Lak Khan,* came to meet him and requested him to transport the Seljuqs across the Oxus to Khorasan. This body of pastoral and barbaric Turkomans, destined to an unexpected but not undeserved greatness, had long been a source of trouble to its neighbours. During the reign of the Samanid kings they had migrated from Turkestan, and crossing the Jaxartes, had settled at Nur in Bukhara from where they used to migrate annually to Darghan in Khwarazm. Their leader, Israel son of Seljuq, the chief after whom the tribe came to be named, was a perpetual terror to the Maliks of Turkestan and Trans-Oxania. "He was wont to enter the chase or the conflict like a whirlwind and a thunder-cloud and vanquished every one who ventured into a personal contest with him. Not a bird in the air and not a deer in the forest escaped his arrow."† Like others, he came riding at the head of his Turkomans to offer his allegiance to Mahmud, 'with a cap placed jauntily on one side of his head and bestriding a horse like the spur of a mountain.' The astute Sultan looked suspiciously at the ambitious

---

*'I-Lak Khan' was the title of the Khans of Kashghar. Mir Khond, Ferishta and Hamdullah Mustawfi greatly differ in their account of Qadr Khan; the Rahatus Sudur of Mohammad Ibn-i Ali Ibn-i Sulaimanur Rawandi (edited by Dr. M. Iqbal) calls him I-Lak Khan. The question is of the remotest interest to the student of Indian history. It will be remembered that the Caliph had refused to transfer Samarkand to Mahmud.

† Tabaqat-i Nasiri.

young chief and asked him how many men he could bring to the army. "If you send one of these arrows into our camp," Israel replied, "fifty thousand of your servants will mount on horse-back." "And if that number," continued Israel, "be not sufficient, send the second arrow to the horde of Balik (Bilkhan Koh), and you will find fifty thousand more." "But," said the Ghaznavide, dissembling his anxiety, "if I should stand in need of the whole force of your kindred tribes?" "Despatch my bow," was the last reply of Israel, "and as it is circulated around, the summons will be obeyed by two hundred thousand horse."* Mahmud made up his mind to crush the Seljuqs before it was too late. An order was served on Israel commanding him to remain within his tent, while four thousand Seljuq families with their goods and chattels were transported across the Oxus under the eyes of the Ghaznavide army. The Sultan's chamberlain, Arsalan Hajib, suggested that the barbarians should be drowned while crossing the river. "Destiny cannot be averted by perfidy any more than by valour," Mahmud remarked, and refused to break his promise.† Israel with his two sons was despatched to the distant fortress of Kalanjar,

---

* Gibbon, Vol. vi. I have adopted the great historian's version of the famous conversation. Rahatus Sudur is more explicit: the first arrow would raise 100,000 horse from Israel's own followers, the second arrow 50,000 from the Turkomans settled in Trans-Oxania, while his bow would bring 200,000 from the Turkomans still in Turkestan.

† Tabaqat-i Nasiri. The Rahatus Sudur says that the Seljuqs were allowed to cross the Oxus at their own request after the imprisonment of Israel. Mahmud allowed this in spite of Arsalan's advice to the contrary.

where he died after seven years.* The exiled families were allotted grazing grounds in the districts of north-west Khorasan and placed under the guardianship of the Khorasani officers, who were ordered to disarm them. But it was easier to bring the Seljuqs into the more fertile tracts of Persia than to keep them in subjection. The migration, once begun, could not be stopped and the Ghaznavide empire was ultimately converted into a Seljuq pasture-land.† These troubles, however, lay in the womb of the future. For the present Mahmud was supreme, and the fall of Israel, whatever its future effects, served as an example to all Turkoman chiefs.

(16) Northern India had ceased to attract Mahmud, for the spoils of its most wealthy
 (16) Somnath temples were already in his treasury.
 (1025—1026). But the rich and prosperous province of Gujrat was still untouched, and on October 18, 1025, he started from Ghaznin with his regular troops and thirty thousand volunteer-horsemen for the temple of Somnath, situated at the distance of a bow-shot from the mouth of the Saraswati, by the

---

*He escaped out of prison once but lost his way and was recaptured.

†Ferishta, Rauzat-us-Safa, Rahat-us-Sudur and Tabaqat-i Nasiri greatly differ in their accounts of the earlier events that brought the Seljuqs into prominence. The matter cannot be discussed here in greater detail and I must content myself with giving what appears to me to be the most rational account. See also Art. 'Seljuq' in Ency. Brit. by Prof. Houtsma.

side of which the earthly body of Lord Krishna had breathed its last.*

“The people of Hind,” says Ferishta (following Ibn-i Asir) “believed that souls after separating from their bodies came to Somnath, and the god assigned to each soul, by way of transmigration, such new body as it deserved. They thought that the tides rose and fell in order to worship the idol. The Brahmans said that as the god was angry with the idols Mahmud had broken, he did not come to their help ; otherwise he could destroy anyone he wanted in the twinkling of an eye. Somnath was the king, while other idols were merely his door-keepers and chamberlains. A hundred thousand people used to collect together in the temple at the time of the solar and lunar eclipses. Presents came to it from distant parts. The princes of Hindustan had endowed it with about ten thousand villages.† A thousand Brahmans worshipped the idol continuously ; and every night it was washed with fresh water from the Ganges, although the Ganges is six hundred karohs from there.‡ A chain of gold, weighing two hundred

---

*The Somnath expedition is not described by Utbi, whose chronicle closes after the defeat of Trilocanpal on the Rahib. The earliest authority seems to be the Kamilut Tawarikh of the Arab historian, Ibn-i Asir. Ferishta gives a detailed account, but he has included later accretions which require a critical examination.

† I have corrected the figures in this paragraph from Ibn-i Asir.

‡ Alberuni says they also brought a basket of flowers from Kashmir.

mans, with bells fastened to it, was hung in a corner of the temple ; it was shaken at the appointed hours to inform the Brahmans that the time for prayer had arrived. Five hundred singing and dancing girls and two hundred musicians were in the service of the temple, and all their requisites were provided out of the endowments and offerings. Three hundred barbers were employed to shave the heads and beards of the pilgrims. Many Rajas of Hindustan dedicated their daughters to Somnath and sent them there. The temple was a spacious edifice and its roof was supported by fifty-six ornamented columns. The idol was cut out of stone ; it was five yards long, of which two yards were below, and three above, the ground. The Tarikh-i Zainul Ma-asir says that the inner chamber of the temple, in which the idol was placed, was dark, the requisite light being supplied by the rays of fine jems attached to the hanging lamps".*

---

*The legend to which Somnath owed its origin is thus described by Alberuni: "The Moon being married to the daughters (lunar stations) of Prajapati preferred one of them, Rohini, to all others, and Prajapati, unable to induce his son-in-law to do justice to all his wives, cursed him so that he became leprous. The Moon repented, but Prajapati's curse was beyond recall. He, however, promised to cover the Moon's shame for half the month and advised him to raise a linga of Mahadeo to wipe off the trace of his sin. "This the Moon did. The linga he raised was the idol of Somnath, for soma means 'moon' and nath means 'master' so that the whole word means the master of the moon. The image was destroyed by Prince Mahmud in 416 A.H. He ordered the upper part to be broken and the remainder to be transported to his residence, Ghaznin, with all its coverings and trappings of gold, jewels and
(Continued).

The Somnath expedition is the one by which Mahmud is most remembered. It was the finest achievement of his military genius. His marches into Hindustan hitherto had been through a fertile territory and he was never in danger of starvation. In moving southwards Mahmud for the first and last time threw his caution aside, defied the inclemencies of nature as well as the spears of his opponents and ventured into a territory where the slightest mishap would have meant complete ruin. Multan was reached by the middle of Ramazan (November) and Mahmud made careful preparations for crossing the extensive desert of Rajputana. Every man in the army was ordered to carry enough water and corn for several days, and thirty thousand camels were loaded as a further precaution. The Rai of Ajmere fled at the approach of the invader. Mahmud plundered the city but refused to delay his march by investing the fort. A general panic embroidered garments. Part of it has been thrown into the hippodrome of the town, together with the Chakrasvamin, an idol of bronze, that had been brought from Thaneswar. Another part of the idol of Somnath lies before the door of the mosque of Ghaznin, on which people rub their feet to clean them from dirt and wet. The reason why Somnath, in particular, has become so famous is that it was a harbour for sea-faring people. The fortress which contained the idol and its treasures was not ancient but was built only a hundred years ago." The original position of the idol was three miles from the mouth of the Saraswati at a spot which was uncovered when the tide receded; hence the legend of the Moon worshipping the linga. Later on, the temple was built at a bow-shot from the mouth of the river. (Alberuni, Vol. ii, p. 103).

---

seems to have deprived the garrisons on the line of his advance of all power of resistance. Even Anhilwara, the capital of Gujrat, was left undefended, and Mahmud after taking from the city the provisions he required, moved down the Saraswati and reached the famous temple in the second week of January. 'The fort of Somnath raised its towers to the sky ; the waves of the sea washed its feet.' The Hindus had climbed the ramparts to witness the arrival of the besiegers. "Our god, Somnath," they shouted to the Mussalmans, "has brought you here to destroy you at one blow for the idols you have broken in Hindustan."

Next morning, which was Friday, the struggle commenced. The Ghaznavides succeeded in scaling the city-walls and the Hindus made a desperate attempt to dislodge them. But night came on before the battle on the ramparts could end and the besiegers withdrew to their camp. On Saturday Mahmud captured the ramparts and entered the city. The Hindus, driven out of their houses, collected round the temple for a last despairing struggle. Band after band prayed fervently to the idol, and after bidding it farewell in 'sorrow and tears,' sallied forth to fight. 'A dreadful slaughter followed at the gate of the temple and few were left alive.' But once more the darkness of night stopped Mahmud's hand, while the intervention of a new factor reminded him of the fickleness of fate.

The Sultan's march had been too rapid to allow the Rais of Gujrat to collect their forces for the defence of the temple. But the desperate resistance of the besieged gave them the time required ; their clumsy military machine began to work with feverish haste ; and on the morning of the third day Mahmud found his camp being encircled by an Indian force sent by the neighbouring Rais for the relief of the garrison. Mahmud left a part of his army to continue the siege and advanced to meet the new-comers with the rest. 'Both sides fought with indescribable courage and valour, and the field of battle was set aflame with their anger and their hate.' But the Indian army was constantly strengthened by new reinforcements and the Ghaznavides were brought to the verge of an irretrievable disaster. Mahmud's position was extremely critical. Defeat would have meant annihilation, and further delay would have entailed defeat. So after a fervent prayer to the Almighty with the cloak of Shaikh Abul Hasan Kharqani in his hands, he led his army to a last attack, and with the good fortune that never permanently deserted him, succeeded in breaking the enemy ranks. The defeat of the relieving force decided the fate of Somnath, and the garrison, overcome by panic and fear, offered no further resistance.

Mahmud entered the temple and possessed himself of its fabulous wealth. 'Not a hundredth part of the gold and precious stones he obtained from Somnath were to be found in the treasury of any king of Hindustan.' Later historians have related how Mahmud refused the enormous ransom offered by the Brahmans, and preferred the title of 'Idol-breaker' (But-shikan) to that of 'Idol-seller' (But-farosh). He struck the idol with his mace and his piety was instantly rewarded by the precious stones that came out of its belly. This is an impossible story.* Apart from the fact that it lacks all contemporary confirmation, the Somnath idol was a solid unsculptured linga, not a statue, and stone could not have come out of its belly. That the idol was broken is unfortunately true enough, but the offer of the Brahmans, and Mahmud's rejection of the offer, is a fable of later days.

From Somnath Mahmud advanced against Param
 Mahmud at Anhil- Deo, Rai of Anhilwara, who seems wara. to have been mainly responsible for the relieving force that had pushed the Ghaznavides so hard. The Rai took refuge in the fort of Khandah, forty farsakhs from Somnath, which was surrounded by the sea. But when Mahmud forded the sea at low tide, the Rai fled away, leaving the fort and its treasures to the Sultan. On returning to Anhilwara, Mahmud for the first and last time seems to have harboured the desire of establishing himself in India. He wanted to make Anhilwara his capital, while assigning Ghaznin to Masud. The climate of Gujrat, 'the beauty of its inhabitants, its alluring gardens, flowing rivers and productive soil,' attracted him; and his cupidity was further excited by the treasures to be obtained from Southern India and the islands beyond the sea. But his officers would have none of it. "To leave the country of Khorasan," they protested, "for which we have sacrificed the finest of gems—our own lives—and to make Gujrat our capital, is far from political wisdom." Mahmud had to yield. He assigned the governorship of Gujrat to Dabshilim (Devasarum), an ascetic of Somnath, and started for Ghaznin. Dabshilim loyally sent the tribute due to the Sultan for some time, but his power failed to take root and he was overthrown by his enemies.*

---

*It is not found in the Kamilut Tawarikh. The earliest authority seems to have been the Tarikh-i Alfi, written six hundred years after Mahmud. The story could have been invented (and believed) only by those who were ignorant of the true structure of the Somnath idol.

The Rais of Rajputana, who had been taken unawares by Mahmud's march through their country, now prepared to contest his return. But the Sultan's army was loaded with spoils. He had no stomach for campaigns in a wilderness where nothing was to be had save hard blows and preferred to march to Multan through the Sindh desert. Even this route was full of dangers. First a Hindu devotee of Somnath undertook to guide the army, and after leading it for a day and a night confessed that he had intentionally led it on a path where no water could be found. Mahmud slew the guide and a 'mysterious light' that appeared in the horizon in response to his prayers led the Mussalmans to fresh water. Then after crossing the desert, the army was harassed by the Jats. But in spite of many hardships, it succeeded in reaching Ghaznin.

(17) Mahmud's last invasion (1027) was intended to punish the Jats, who had so
 (17) The Jats wantonly insulted his army while (1027). returning from Somnath. He constructed a flotilla of fourteen hundred boats at Multan,

---

*Ferishta's detailed account of the two Dabshilims seems to have no better foundation than the Anwar-i Suhaili. It is difficult to say what element of truth it contains.

and placing twenty men armed with bows, arrows and flasks of naphtha in every boat, proceeded against the recalcitrant tribe. The Jats collected together four thousand boats and offered a stout resistance; but they were defeated in the naval battle owing to the superior construction of the Sultan's boats, which had been provided with one pointed iron spike in front and one on each side, and the havoc wrought by the explosions of naphtha. Many of the Jats were drowned and their families, which they had removed to the islands of the Indus for safety, were captured.

The Sultan's remaining years were exclusively absorbed in western affairs. The Annexation of Seljuq trouble increased day by day. Isfahan and Ray. His generals were unable to subdue them and appealed to him to come in person. He did so. The Seljuqs were defeated and dispersed, but their pastoral bands parted only to unite again. Meanwhile his officers had overthrown the Buwaihid kingdom of Ray and the Sultan marched thither to establish his government over the newly conquered territory. His hand fell heavily on the 'heretics' and Carmathians who had multiplied under the protection of that Shia dynasty, and every one against whom heresy could be proved was put to death. But the Sultan's days were numbered, and the first symptoms of phthisis (sil) had already appeared when in the autumn of 1029 he assigned the government of Isfahan and Ray to Masud and returned to Balkh. Here his condition grew worse, though 'he bore up bravely before the eyes of the people'. In the spring he moved to Ghaznin, where on the 30th April, 1030 A.D. after forty years of ceaseless activity he was called back to the land of everlasting rest at the age of sixty-three.

“The world grips hard on the hard-striving,”
 The last campaign. Hafiz has said ; and tradition will have us believe that two days before his death the great Sultan, unable to reconcile himself to the loss of a world that was slipping out of his grasp, ordered the precious stones of his treasury to be brought and displayed in the court-yard of his palace. He gazed at them yearningly and with weeping eyes ordered them to be locked up again, without finding it in his heart to give anything in charity. Next day he got into his litter and reviewed his horses, elephants and camels, and still more overcome, burst into loud and helpless sobs.* But it would be unbecoming to pause over the last moments of a strong and powerful mind. Perhaps the slow and wasting disease had so bereft him of his strength, that at the door of death he was no longer able to hold over his face the veil with which he was wont to conceal his human frailties ! Perhaps his rationalistic mind, too critical for the commonplace orthodoxy of the day and not profound enough for the deeper convictions of the philosopher and the mystic, trembled at the mysterious land before him as he saw it approaching nearer hour by hour, and he was unable to embark on his last campaign with that confident courage with which he had plunged into the forests of Hindustan ! It is by the manner of his life, not by the mode of his death, that a man is to be judged. The invincible hero of thirty campaigns had disappeared weeks before his officers buried his emaciated body in the Ferozah Palace of Ghaznin.

---

*This account is found in Ferishta, who says that Mahmud died with ‘much reluctance and regret,’ and all later historians repeat the incident. Its origin is hard to discover. It may have been taken from the lost portions of Baihaki. There is nothing improbable in the story. Consumptive diseases have such effects.

CHAPTER III

THE CHARACTER AND VALUE OF MAHMUD'S WORK

All men are more or less the products of their environment, and a rational criticism of Mahmud's work must begin with an examination of the spirit of his age.

Most Mussalmans imagine that their faith has always been what it is to-day, or in the alternative, they deplore that Four epochs of Muslim History. it has since the time of the Pious Caliphs been subject to a slow but continuous decline. This is, of course, absurd. Islam, like all other religions, has had its recurring periods of spiritual rise and fall; it has been differently conceived by different people at different times; like all things really and truly human, it is always changing and never permanently the same. We are here only concerned with the broadest changes in the Muslim world, and these from the rise of Islam to the conquest of Muslim Asia by Chengiz Khan, may be divided into four parts. (1) The first Period of Expansion (622-748), which includes the conquests of Arabia, Iraq, Syria, Persia, and Northern Africa under the Pious Caliphs and their Omayyad successors. It is an epoch characterised by fervent religious zeal, and owing to the captivating appeal Islam made to the depressed classes, the conquered peoples were converted to the new faith. (2) The Period of the Great Abbaside Caliphs (748-900) is a period of prosperity and peace with no conquests to its record. It is characterised by a cosmopolitan civilisation in which Arabic became the language of the educated classes of all countries, while a centralised administration kept the Muslim world together. (3) The Period of 'Minor Dynasties' (900-1000) is essentially a period of transition in which the administration of the Caliph disappears and a number of small principalities rise on its ruins. Its most prominent feature is the Persian Renaissance, which made Persian the language of literary classes and brought a new imperialistic idea to the fore-front in place of cosmopolitan Caliphate of the Abbasides. (4) The Period of the Turko-Persian Empires (1000-1220) is to be regarded as the political expression of Persian ideals and includes the reigns of the Ghaznavide, the Seljuq and the Khwarazmian dynasties.

Mahmud was the last of the 'minor kings' and the first of the great Turko-Persian Emperors. The inspiring motive of his life and the lives of his contemporaries was not Islam but the spirit of the Persian Renaissance.

The age of Mahmud of Ghaznin was devoid of the higher spirit of faith; and theological discussions, which prosper most when religion is dead, diverted such zeal as existed towards a war of sects. When men find it difficult to believe in God, they try to prove Him; when they cease to love their neighbour, they attempt to convince themselves that hating him is a moral duty. The conversion of the non-Muslim was given up in favour of the more entertaining game of exterminating the 'heretic'. From east to west the Muslim world was torn by sectarian feuds and the strong arm of the persecutor was called in vain to heal the troubles of a people, weltering in fanaticism but innocent of faith. From this war of hair-splitting theologians the finer minds of Persia turned with a sense of relief to the resuscitation of their national culture; and the minor dynasties, that had grown up after the devoid of the Caliphate, gave them the protection and patronage they needed. Every provincial court became the centre of a revivalist movement. Ancient Persian legends were rediscovered and popularised. The Persian language, which had been cast aside as the vernacular of the common people, assumed the dignity of a national tongue. Every one, who could, began to turn out verses in a language singularly capable of conforming to the hardest rules of metre and rhyme, and even poets of mediocre abilities could be sure of a good career. Moreover the glories of the Kiani and the Sassanid Empires, alluring with the dream of a half-forgotten greatness, exercised on more imaginative minds a fascination which slowly but definitely drew them away from the Path of the Prophet. The change was, of course, unconscious. Like the school-men of medieval Europe, who talked as if the philosophy of Aristotle contemporaries of Mahmud were aware of no difference between the lessons of the Shah Nama and the principles of the Quran. Faridun and Jamshed, Kai-Kaus and Kai-Khusrau, the heroic Rustam and the Macedonian Alexander won from the rising generations the homage which all true Mussalmans should have paid to the Prophet and his Companions. Now while the Prophet and his Companions stood for certain principles to be established at all costs and had resorted to war as a means for their promulgation, the legendary heroes of Persia only evoked in their devotees an ambition for greatness and ruthless imperialism without the sense of a moral mission, and instilled into them precepts of worldly wisdom, such as Polonious bequeathed to Laertes and such as Sadi's Gulistan has taught to the children of later generations—a wisdom essentially selfish in its outlook and superbly unconscious of all higher aims.

Spirit of the Persian Renaissance.

Thus the new spirit, on one hand, helped the evolution of a new culture and brought an atmosphere of refinement and polish to the court and the camp ; and, on the other hand, it heralded in an era of futile and purposeless wars through which provincial kings, rebellious governors, tribal chiefs and even daring robbers, expected to reach the insecure eminence of Alexander, the Great. Fighting was looked upon, thanks to the militant spirit of the Turks, as a sport and an attribute of manliness, a good thing to be sought for itself—not as a painful process for the attainment of human prosperity. For a century before Mahmud, princes of the 'minor dynasties' had been acting Jamshed and Kai-Khusrau, and their court-poets, richly paid for the work, had proclaimed their greatness in panegyrics of which men less lost in ambition would have felt ashamed. Then came the great Mahmud to achieve that for which others had fought and died in vain, and kings and princes licked the dust humbly before the figure of a new Alexander. But the giant for all his grandeur was made of the same moral stuff as the dwarfs that had gone before. It was his abilities, not his character, that raised him to an unquestioned pre-eminence.

The Literary Renaissance of Persia found in Mahmud its most magnificent, if not its most discriminating, patron. Four hundred poets, with Unsuri, the poet-laureate, at their head, were in constant attendance at the Sultan's court. Their official duty was to sing his praises and the Sultan, in spite of the stinginess attributed to him, seems to have been extremely generous. Ghazari Razi, a poet from Ray, was awarded fourteen thousand dirhams for a qasida that pleased the Sultan, while the poet-laureate's mouth was thrice filled with pearls for an unpremeditated qita. Among others who came flocking from far and near, Farrukhi, the author of a qasida remarkable for its captivating rhythm, Minuchihri, who specialised in the cult of vine, and Asjadi, who is responsible for the following well-known quatrain, are most famous.*

---

*The details of the lives of the poets cannot be given here nor an examination of their work attempted. Prof. Browne's
(Continued)

“I do repent of wine and talk of wine,
 “Of idols fair with chins like silver fine.
 “A lip-repentance and a lustful heart —
 “O God, forgive this penitence of mine !

But it is obvious that the Sultan's patronage, while stimulating men of decent merit to do their best, would fail to reach the highest genius, which in every country and in every age has scorned to bow its knees to democracies and kings. For this Mahmud is in no way to blame. Mankind has yet to discover a method for dealing with its finest products. Whatever be the element of truth in the famous Firdausi legend, the tradition that represents the great poet, in whom Persian nationalism amounted to a religion, as flying from an emperor of Afrasiyab's (Turkish) race, certainly gives us an idea of the gloom that sat oppressively on the most sensitive Persian minds. Two persons of a radically different stamp were destined to share Firdausi's fate. The great physician and biologist, Shaikh bu Ali Sina (Avicenna), refused to come to the court of a king to whom the scientist's views and his sense of personal independence would have been equally unpalatable, and after flying from town to town before the agents

---

Literary History of Persia, Vol. II, Chap. II and Maulana Shibli Numani's Shirul-Ajam, Vol. I, have put in a modern form all that is found in the old Tazkirahs. See also Hadi, Studies in Persian Literature, published by the National University, Aligarh. The Firdausi legend has been subjected to a trenchant criticism by the journal 'Urdu,' edited by Maulvi Abdul Haq Sahib, which has robbed the time-honoured story of all its charm.

of Mahmud's wrath, he at last found a safe asylum with the Buwaihid ruler of Ray. His friend, the mathematician-scholar Abu Rihan Alberuni, whose appreciative study of Hindu philosophy stands in such pleasant contrast with the prejudices of a stormy time, was less fortunate. Brought a prisoner from his native Khwarazm, he was thrown into prison and thence exiled to India on that life of wandering to which we owe the immortal Kitabul Hind.*

The poetry of Mahmud's age reflects the spirit of the time. It is brilliant but not deep. Mystic ideas had not yet become current coin, and the ghazal, the grand vehicle of mystic emotion, had not yet been discovered. Qasidas (panegyric odes) in praise of generous patrons were the poet's principal occupation. The genius of Firdausi brought the masnavi (romance) into vogue, while his master, Asadi, is credited with the not very commendable invention of the Munazirah or 'strife-poem'—a composition which leaves little room for poetic thoughts. Qitas (fragments) and rubais (quatrains) served to express the poet's lighter moods. Yet the Ghaznavide poets, for all their short-comings, have a certain freshness which succeeding ages have lacked. There is no artificiality about them. They had tasted the joys of material prosperity and loved to praise the beauty of women of flesh and blood and the alluring intoxication of wine. The reality of their human emotions prevented them from falling into the meaningless verbosity of later ages ; and if they lack the deeper perception of their mystic successors, whose songs begin and end with a symbolic representation of the Absolute, their poetry is at least in touch with life. The poet sang of what his audience knew and felt—the clash of arms on the field of strife, the joys of companionship in the warrior's camp, the innumerable emotions of men and women whom an artificial culture had not yet deprived of their native intensity of feelings, and, above all, of the glories and sorrows of their much loved Iran. The thoughts and emotions of the educated men of the day were the most favoured themes of the poet's verse. The great period of Persian poetry, which begins with Sadi and ends with Jami, was yet to come. Nevertheless the constructive genius of the poet won victories more solid than the warrior's futile campaigns. The empire of Mahmud crumbled to dust nine years after the Sultan's death. The Shahnama lives for ever.

---

*Some very interesting anecdotes about Alberuni and Bu Ali Sina will be found in the Chahar Maqala of Nizami-ul Aruzi-us Samarqandi (Gibb's Memorial Series). A short biography of Bu Ali Sina is given in the Habibus Siyar.

Mahmud's work in India is reserved for a separate discussion but the Sultan was essentially a central Asian prince. The historic soil of Ajam was the garden and the grave of Ghaznavide hopes. The cosmopolitan administration of the Caliphate had been shattered beyond the possibility of reconstruction, and the new imperialism with its secular and Persian outlook had been in the air for some generations past. Now 'imperialism' meant two things—first, a conquest of the smaller principalities that would bring all Muslim peoples, who had been infused with the spirit of Persian civilisation, within the fold of a single state ; and secondly, the erection of a just and beneficent administration that would reconcile every section of the subjects to their common government by an era of prosperity and peace. Mahmud's performance of the first part of his work is as remarkable as his failure to perform the second. The rise of the Ghaznavide empire struck contemporaries with wonder ; but they were no less surprised with the rapidity of its fall.

A man of refinement and culture with an instinctive admiration for everything beautiful in literature and art, it was in generalship that Mahmud excelled. War was the prevailing madness, but never since the fall of the Sassanian Empire before the armies of the Second Caliph had an invader so invincible appeared on the Persian soil. The exploits of Alexander in the East were rivalled and, in fact, surpassed. The Tartar barbarians of the north were driven pell-mell beyond the Jaxartes. The 'minor dynasties' of Persia were crushed to death. From Isfahan to Bundelkhand and from Samarkand to Gujrat, the Ghaznavide subdued every opponent and struck down every rival. The conquered people were no cowards. They fought bravely and were as willing to die as their Ghaznavide opponents. It was Mahmud's scientific imagination that made the difference. Against the clumsy organisation of the Indians and their childish trust in mere numbers, he brought into the field an army that had been trained to obey the commands of a single will. The thick-headed Tartars found to their cost that mere courage and confidence in fate were no match for the fierce onslaught of disciplined ranks. But strategy rather than tactics was Mahmud's strong point. From his throne at Ghaznin his eagle-eye surveyed everything in east and west. He knew where to strike and he always struck hard. The rapidity of his marches surprised and bewildered his opponents. The man who, in the course of a single year, overawed the Carmathians at Multan, defeated the Tartars at Balkh and yet found time enough to capture a rebellious governor on the banks of the Jhelum, could not fail to create havoc among his stout-hearted but slow-moving contemporaries. And yet Mahmud, for all his daring, was the most cautious of men. He never attacked an enemy he was not strong enough to overpower. He never failed in what he undertook because he undertook nothing impossible. The Indian invasions, in which his military genius shows itself at its best, are a marvellous mixture of boldness with caution.

Administrative questions, on the other hand, never interested Mahmud, and while taking up the command of the army in person, he left the prosaic task of carrying on the government to his ministers. His civil officers had the efficiency he required; they were strict and heavy-handed and worked their machinery with the same discipline and order as their military colleagues. But they lacked that breadth of vision, which would have enabled them to supplement the conquests of their master by a far-sighted statesmanship and construct a machinery of imperial administration on permanent and durable foundations. His wazirs were certainly clever and thorough in their methods, but like all administrative experts they were devoid of idealism ; and an empire without ideals is an edifice on quicksands. For the first two years of his reign, his father's Wazir, Abul Abbas Fasih Ahmed bin Isfarieni, continued at his post. Abul Abbas was ignorant of Arabic and made Persian the official language—an innovation abolished by his famous successor. But if lacking in education, he had that extensive knowledge of affairs which was to be expected of one who had risen to be the second greatest man in the kingdom from the humble position of a clerk, and he 'worked marvels in the administration of the state and the army.' The Sultan, however, quarrelled with him over the possession of a Turkish slave, and the fallen Wazir was tortured to death by the officers who wished to deprive him of all his wealth. Abul Abbas' successor, the great Khwaja Ahmad bin Hasan Maimandi, left on his contemporaries an impression second only to that of Mahmud. A foster-brother and classmate of the Sultan, Khwaja Ahmad was distinguished throughout his life by an unimpeachable loyalty to the House of Ghaznin, which in no way interfered with the stern obedience he demanded of his subordinates for himself. His father, Hasan Maimandi, collector of revenue at Bust, was hanged by Subuktigin on a charge of peculation, but the sad event had no effect on the son's career. It would have been difficult, if not impossible, for the Sultan to embark on his conquering career without the organising capacity of his minister to support him. An excellent scholar, an intriguer of the highest order and a stern man of business, Ahmad directed the affairs of the government for eighteen years with an efficiency none could deny. But a strong Wazir and a strong Sultan were really incompatible; the Khwaja's soft tongue and effusive loyalty delayed, but could not finally prevent, the inevitable rupture. His extraordinary ascendancy was painful to many, and a strong party, headed by the Sultan's son-in-law, Amir Ali, and the great general, Altuntash, was formed against him. The Sultan made up his mind to prove that the Khwaja was not indispensable and imprisoned him in an Indian fort. As if to show that the office could be abolished, if necessary, Mahmud refrained from appointing a Wazir for some time. His choice ultimately fell on Ahmad Husain bin Mikal, generally known as Hasnak. The new Wazir, a close personal friend of the Sultan, was remarkable for his 'conversational powers,' and unfortunately also for 'the impetuosity of his temperament,' which impelled him to take the wrong side in the succession-question that arose towards the end of Mahmud's reign.

An extensive empire had been established over the ruins of many governments. What for? We are not told that Mahmud's administration was better than what had existed before, while the collection of revenue was certainly more strict. Everybody complained that the Sultan went on conquering without being able to establish peace and order in the conquered lands. The condition of the Punjab was chaotic and other provinces fared no better. Caravan routes were unsafe, and the occasional efforts of the government to provide for the safety of its merchants display its weakness rather than its strength. "He is a stupid fellow", a Muslim mystic is said to have remarked of him, "Unable to administer what he already possesses, he yet goes out to conquer new countries." A strong sense of justice Mahmud certainly had, and many stories and anecdotes are told about him, but he never went beyond deciding with acuteness and wisdom the few cases that came before him. No general effort was made to suppress the robber chiefs, whose castles prevented all inter-communication between the various parts of the empire. No imperial police system was organised to perform the work which smaller princes present on the spot had done before. The armed and organised populations of medieval cities and towns required but little help from the state to stand up against the forces of disorder, but even that little was not forthcoming. We have only to contrast the Ghaznavide government with the empires of the Seljuqs and of the Sultans of Delhi to see the elements Mahmud woefully lacked. No laws, good or bad, stand to his name. No administrative measures of importance emanated from his acute mind, which failed to see anything greater or nobler than an ever-expanding field of military glory. The peoples forcibly brought within the empire—Indians, Afghans, Turks, Tartars and Persians—were joined together by no bond except their subordination to a common monarch. A wise, firm and beneficent administration would have reconciled them to the loss of their local liberties, but that is just what Mahmud failed to provide. The Sultan and his officers alone were interested in the continuation of the empire; and when nine years after Mahmud's death, the Seljuqs knocked down the purposeless structure, no one cared to weep over its fate.

These observations will enable us to assign Mahmud his proper place in eastern history. He was essentially the pioneer of the 'new imperialism' brought into vogue by the Persian Renaissance. The era of the 'Universal Muslim Caliphate' had gone, never to return, and the Successor of the Prophet was no more the administrative head of the Faithful. The 'minor dynasties' had proved themselves a pest by their unceasing intrigues and purposeless wars. The only possible alternative was a 'secular empire,' or 'saltanat' as Mahmud called it, which would unite the Muslim world together and give it the peace and prosperity it longed for. Islam had neither contemplated nor sanctioned the moral foundations of the new institution, which drew its inspiration from ancient Persia and breathed its pagan spirit; and the shariat, in spite of its democratic outlook, was gradually twisted to suit the requirements of the time and ended by preaching submission to the monarch, who assumed, under the pretence of being the 'Shadow of God' (Zilullah), the airs of the 'divine' Sassanian emperors. The result was both good and bad. The democratic feeling, which has persisted in the social life of the Mussalmans in spite of all opposing forces, was eliminated from politics, and political subservience, from being a postulate of necessity and prudence, was elevated to the dignity of a religious duty. "Obedience to kings," says Abdul Fazl, summing up the wisdom and the folly of six hundred years, "is a kind of divine worship." At the same time the monarchical idea and the secularisation of politics led to much that was undoubtedly beneficial. The peoples of Ajam were welded together by their loyalty to a common king in spite of their racial differences and sectarian strifes. Moreover it became possible for Muslims and non-Muslims to live together when religion was considered a private affair of the king and the sphere of government was restricted to the secular affairs of the subjects.

To Mahmud of Ghaznin belongs the credit of being the first Muslim emperor, and to him more than to anyone else the rise of 'monarchical sovereignty' among the Mussalmans is due. It does not detract from his merit that he was followed by statesmen abler than himself and by dynasties more permanent than his own. The Seljuqs of Persia and the Emperor-Sultans of Delhi surpassed him as administrators, and Chengiz and Timur in conquering might. A pioneer is bound to have his shortcomings. His Central Asian policy was devoid of statesmanship while his work in India was even more deplorable.

Though India took up much of Mahmud's time, she had no place in his dreams. His real aim was the establishment of a Turko-Persian empire and the Indian expeditions were a means to that end. They gave him the prestige of a 'holy warrior', which was required to raise him head and shoulders above the basket-full of Ajami princes, every one of whom was determined to be great, while the wealth of the temples made the financial position of his kingdom secure and enabled him to organise an army which the minor princes were in no position to resist. Beyond this Mahmud, who knew the limitations of his power, did not try to go. No conquest was intended because no conquest was possible. A Muslim government over the country was beyond the region of practical politics without a native Muslim population to support it. Mahmud was no missionary ; conversion was not his object; and he had too much of good sense to waste away his army in a futile attempt to keep down a hostile population by armed garrisons. He took at a sweep-stake all that centuries of Indian industry had accumulated, and then left the Indians to rebuild, as well as they could, the ruined fortifications of their cities and the fallen altars of their gods. He obtained the gold and the prestige he needed and he had aspired for nothing else. Except for a passing mood at Anhilwara, he never thought of establishing his power over the country. Annexation was not his object. The addition of the Punjab to his kingdom so late as 1021-22 proves, rather than disproves, his non-territorial ambitions. He had at first expected his alliance with Anandpal to enable him to penetrate to the trans-Gangetic plain. That alliance failed owing to the latter's death and Mahmud felt the necessity of having his footing somewhere in the country. Even then he seems to have looked at Lahore and Multan simply as robber's perches, from where he could plunge into Hindustan and Gujrat at will. His western campaigns, on the other hand, give evidence of a different policy. They always led to annexations, and very often Mahmud personally supervised the establishment of his government over the conquered territory.

The Indian campaigns are one of the finest achievements of military genius. Mahmud was venturing into an unknown country of large rivers, thick forests and a bitterly hostile people of whose language and customs he was ignorant. To another man it would have been a leap in the dark but Mahmud, unwilling to take any risks, proceeded warily and advanced from point to point with a mixture of boldness and caution, which is as admirable as the fearless and dashing courage of his subordinates. A false step would have meant disaster; the loss of a single battle would have left his disorganised forces at the mercy of the population. At first he never ventured more than ten or twelve marches from his base and his acquisition of Bhera enabled him to strike safely at the enemy. But caution brought success, success brought prestige, and Mahmud, finding that his mere name had grown powerful enough to overawe his enemies, plunged thrice into the trans-Gangetic plain and a fourth time into Gujrat. The campaigns look like triumphal marches but were really full of danger. Even an indecisive battle would have revived the spirit of the much harassed Indians and brought unexpected forces into the field. Mahmud trembled when in 1019-20, after an uncontested march of three months from his capital, he at last came across the Rai of Kalanjar, who could show a good fight; yet the flight of the Rai at night shows the terror the Sultan inspired. Still if Mahmud was to possess himself of the treasures of the temples, the risk had to be undertaken; for a piecemeal annexation of the country was beyond his strength. The issue showed that he had not miscalculated any important factor in the situation.

The Sultan's great advantage over his Indian opponents was the unitary organisation of his state. The resources of Ghaznin were at the disposal of a single mind; the strength of Hindustan was divided among a multitude of factious Rais, sub-Rais, local chiefs and village-headmen, between whom anything like sensible co-operation was impossible. The feudal organisation of the Indians, with its divided allegiance, clannish spirit and love of local independence, left them helpless before an enemy to whom feudalism and clannish feeling was alike unknown. The Ghaznavides knew and obeyed their master; the Indians had no master to obey. The power of the Rai of Lahore was defied by the Rais subordinate to him, who refused to be relegated to the position of mere governors; and instead of meeting the enemy as the loyal generals of the chief whom his position and pre-eminence alike seemed to mark off as the national hero, they preferred to be defeated by the Ghaznavide one by one. An internal revolution, which would have placed the defensive strength of the country in the hands of a central power, was absolutely necessary if the newly-arisen enemy was to be resisted with success. But the hand of the reformer was numbed by the time-honoured customs of ages; and the tribal feuds of the Indians, their complicated system of military tenures and local rights, prevented them from mustering in full force on the field of battle. The result was defeat, disgrace, disaster. Temple after temple was plundered; the centres of Indian civilisation were ruined; and neither the wisdom of the Brahman, nor the heroism of the Kshatriyas, nor the pious adoration of silent millions could prevent their idols of gold and silver from being melted into Ghaznavide coin. The Indians did not lack fighting spirit, and they had a country and a religion fully worthy of their devotion. The carnage round the Somnath temple, the courage with which the garrison of many an unknown fort died to the last man before the unwavering Ghaznavide ranks, showed what better leadership might have achieved,—and proved, if proof was needed, that even in the hour of deepest gloom the Indians had not forgotten how to die. But their social and political customs paralysed them; for with us, unfortunately, custom is not an accident but the essence of faith.

Organised anarchy of the Indians.

The great Sultan did not fail to take advantage of this 'organised anarchy' once he had discovered its real nature. His first steps were tentative, but the spectacle of an army, innumerable as ants and locusts, flying away from Waihind (1008) before even the battle had become warm, convinced him that the Indian confederacy was a soul-less ghost before which he had needlessly trembled. With ceaseless care he and his father had forged a terrible machine which could be now used to good purpose. The Ghaznavide army was composed of heterogenous material, but strict discipline, years of comradeship in arms, the memory of past victories and hopes of future spoliation and plunder, had welded Indians, Afghans, Turks and Persians together. Training had created confidence and confidence led to success. Above all, the subordination of everything to the penetrative intellect and commanding will of the Sultan gave it an irresistible momentum against its faction-ridden opponents. Mahmud flashed like a lightning across the path of the bewildered Rais, thrust himself between them before they could unite, drove them away from one another and defeated them in detail. There was no resisting his might. 'Vini, vidi, vici.' A dark fear began to oppress the Indian mind. It was imagined that the Mussalmans would be always victorious and that a new race of Huns would hold the sacred soil of Aryavarta in perpetual terrorism. Nothing could be farther from truth. The Ghaznavide had not come to stay.

The non-religious character of the expeditions will be obvious to the critic who has grasped the salient features of the spirit of the age. They were not crusades but secular exploits waged for the greed of glory and gold. It is impossible to read a religious motive into them. The Ghaznavide army was not a host of holy warriors resolved to live and die for the faith; it was an enlisted and paid army of trained veterans accustomed to fight Hindus and Mussalmans alike. Only in two of the later campaigns were any volunteers present, and insignificant as was their proportion to the regular troops, Mahmud found them unfit for the rapid and disciplined movements he desired. The Sultan was too undemocratic in outlook and temper for marshalling the forces of a triumphant fanaticism and he never essayed the task.* The missionary spirit, that might have wept over the fate of so many souls 'lost to paradise' or seen in India a fertile soil for implanting the Prophet's Faith, was denied to him. His object was lower and more realisable. Content to deprive the 'unbelievers' of their worldly goods, he never forced them to change their faith and left India the non-Muslim land he found it.

---

*It is a significant fact that Mahmud seldom, if ever, shared the hard life of his soldiers. Such a thing would have been below the dignity of the 'new monarchy.'

For time out of mind the exports of India had been in excess of her imports and the wealth of precious metals had been slowly drawn into the country. Mines were also being worked in various provinces. The natural consequence was an ever-accumulating mass of gold and silver, which won for India a reputation for fabulous riches, and, by the time of Mahmud, had become a serious national danger. Add to it, generations of pious Hindus had gradually transferred the wealth of the country to the temples, which, unlike the peasants' purse and the Rai's treasury, never lost what they had once gained. It was impossible that the Indian temples, like the Catholic Church in Europe, should not sooner or later tempt some one strong and unscrupulous enough for the impious deed. Nor was it to be expected that a man of Mahmud's character would allow the tolerance Islam inculcates to restrain him from taking possession of the gold, 'to which his heart turned as a magnet turns towards iron,' when the Indians themselves had simplified his work by concentrating the wealth of their country at a few selected places. Plundering an enemy's place of worship was regarded by contemporaries as a legitimate act of war—the unavoidable consequence of a defeat. His Hindu opponents were infuriated, but not surprised, at what he did; they knew his motives were economic, not religious, and provided a sufficient indemnity was offered, he was not unwilling to spare their idols. He took away the gold they would have loved to retain but never compelled them to join a creed in which they did not believe. His Indian soldiers were free to blow their sankh and bow before their idols in Imperial Ghaznin. He accepted the principle of toleration in the restricted form in which his age understood it; and it would be futile to blame him for not rising to the moral height of the generations that followed and the generations that had gone before.

No honest historian should seek to hide, and no Mussalman acquainted with his faith will try to justify, the wanton destruction of temples that followed in the wake of the Ghaznavide army. Islam—an a posteriori justification. Contemporary as well as later historians do not attempt to veil the nefarious acts but relate them with pride. It is easy to twist one's conscience; and we know only too well how easy it is to find a religious justification for what people wish to do from worldly motives. Islam sanctioned neither the vandalism nor the plundering motives of the invader; no principle known to the Shariat justified the uncalled for attack on Hindu princes who had done Mahmud and his subjects no harm; the wanton destruction of places of worship is condemned by the law of every creed. And yet Islam, though it was not an inspiring motive, could be utilised as an a posteriori justification for what had been done. It was not difficult to identify the spoliation of non-Muslim populations with service to Islam, and persons to whom the argument was addressed found it too much in consonance with the promptings of their own interests to examine it critically. So the precepts of the Quran were misinterpreted or ignored and the tolerant policy of the Second Caliph was cast aside in order that Mahmud and his myrmidons may be able to plunder Hindu temples with a clear and untroubled conscience.

It is a situation to make one pause. With a new faith everything depends on its method of presentation. It will be welcomed if it appears as a message of hope, and hated if it wears the mask of a brutal terrorism. Islam as a world-force is to be judged by the life of the Prophet and the policy of the Second Caliph. Its early successes were really due to its character as a revolutionary force against religions that had lost their hold on the minds of the people and against social and political systems that were grinding down the lower classes. Under such circumstances the victory of Islam was considered by the conquered population as something intrinsically desirable ; it ended the regime of an aristocratic priesthood and a decrepit monarchy, while the doctrine of equality, first preached in the eastern world, opened a career to the talent of the depressed masses and resulted in the wholesale conversion of the populations of Arabia, Syria, Persia and Iraq. Now Hinduism with its intense and living faith was something quite unlike the Zorastrianism of Persia and the Christianity of Asia Minor, which had so easily succumbed before the invader ; it suffered from no deep seated internal diseases and, a peculiarity of the national character of the Hindus, 'deeply seated in them and manifest to everybody,' was their intense satisfaction and pride in their customs. "They believe," says Alberuni, "that there is no country but theirs, no nation like theirs, no kings like theirs, no religion like theirs, no science like theirs. They are haughty, foolishly vain, self-conceited and stolid. According to their belief, there is no country on earth but theirs, no other race of men but theirs, and no created beings besides them have any knowledge or science whatsoever. Their haughtiness is such that, if you tell them of any science or scholars in Khorasan and Persia, they will think you both an ignoramus and a liar." People with this insularity of outlook were not likely to lend their ears to a new message. But the policy of Mahmud secured the rejection of Islam without a hearing.

A religion is naturally judged by the character of those who believe in it; their faults and their virtues are believed to be the effect of their creed. It was inevitable that the Hindus should consider Islam a deviation from the truth when its followers deviated so deplorably from the path of rectitude and justice. A people is not conciliated by being robbed of all it holds most dear, nor will it love a faith that comes to it in the guise of plundering armies and leaves devastated fields and ruined cities as monuments of its victorious method for reforming the morals of a prosperous but erratic world. "They came, burnt, killed, plundered, captured—and went away" was a Persian's description of the Mongol invasions of his country; it would not be an inappropriate summary of Mahmud's achievements in Hindustan. It was not thus that the Prophet had preached Islam in Arabia; and no one need be surprised that the career of the conquering Ghaznavide created a burning hatred for the new faith in the Hindu mind and blocked its progress more effectually than armies and forts. "Mahmud," says the observant Alberuni, "utterly ruined the prosperity of the country, and performed those wonderful exploits, by which the Hindus became like atoms of dust scattered in all directions and like a tale of old in the mouth of the people. Their scattered remains cherish, of course, the most inveterate hatred of all Muslims. This is the reason, too, why Hindu sciences have retired far away from those parts of the country conquered by us, and have fled to places where our hand cannot yet reach, to Kashmir, Banaras and other places. And there the antagonism between them and all foreigners receives more and more nourishment both from political and religious and other causes."

'The evil that men do lives after them; the good is often buried with their bones!' Mahmud's work, whatever it might have been, was swept off fifteen years after his death by the Hindu Revival. 'Those who had taken up the sword perished by the sword.' East of Lahore no trace of the Mussalmans remained; and Mahmud's victories, while they failed to shake the moral confidence of Hinduism, won an everlasting infamy for his faith. Two centuries later, men who differed from Mahmud as widely as two human beings can possibly differ, once more brought Islam into the land. But times had changed. The arrogance of the Mussalmans had disappeared with the conquest of Ajam by the Mongolian hordes. The spirit of the Persian Renaissance had blossomed and died, and the new mysticism, with its cosmopolitan tendencies and with doctrines which did not essentially differ from what the Hindu rishis had taught in ancient days, made possible that exchange of ideas between men of the two creeds which Alberuni had longed for in vain. Instead of the veterans who had crossed the frontier in search of their winter-spoils, there came a host of refugees from the burning villages of Central Asia, longing for a spot where they could lay their heads in peace and casting aside, all hopes of returning to the land of their birth. The serpent had reappeared but without his poisonous fangs. The intellectual history of medieval India begins with the advent of Shaikh Moinuddin of Ajmere and its political history with the accession of Sultan Alauddin Khilji; the two features which distinguish it from preceding generations are the mystic propaganda started by the Chishti Saint and the administrative and economic measures inaugurated by the revolutionary Emperor. With the proper history of our country Mahmud has nothing to do. But we have inherited from him the most bitter drop in our cup. To later generations Mahmud became the arch-fanatic he never was; and in that 'incarnation' he is still worshipped by such Mussalmans as have cast off the teachings of Lord Krishna in their devotion to minor gods. Islam's worst enemies have ever been its own fanatical followers.

CHAPTER IV

FALL OF THE GHAZNAVIDE EMPIRE

Sultan Mahmud's two eldest sons, Masud and Mohammad, were born on the same day and it was difficult to decide the question of precedence between them. But Mohammad, a virtuous and educated prince who composed verses in Arabic, had neither the energy nor the strength necessary for wielding a sceptre, and the eyes of all men were naturally turned towards his brother, who had the physique and personality of a Rustum. No one could lift Masud's mace with one hand from the ground and his arrow pierced through a plate of steel. But the Sultan, somewhat envious of feats totally beyond his own strength, made a will in favour of Mohammad and obtained a firman confirming it from the Caliph. The Wazir, Hasnak, also worked for Mohammad and a brittle alliance of the nobles was formed in his favour. Masud refused to submit. 'The Sword is a truer authority than any writing,' he stoutly declared; and the Sultan, to whom his son's answer was conveyed, felt it to be painfully true.

The conquests in eastern Persia during the last years of Mahmud's reign had been mostly due to Masud, and when returning from Ray to Balkh in 1029, the Sultan had left him in charge of Khorasan and the newly conquered territories. It was, consequently, easier for Mohammad's supporters to obtain control of the capital on his father's death. They summoned him from Gorkan and placed him on the throne. The new Sultan distributed large sums to make himself popular. His subjects and soldiers thanked him for the kindness but refused to take him seriously. Everyone expected Masud would come and overthrow the rickety government. Less than two months after his accession, the famous Abun Najm Ahmad Ayaz, Ali Dayah and a body of slaves took horses from the royal stables in broad daylight and started for Bust. They were overtaken by Soyand Rai, the commander of the Hindus, and in the battle that followed most of the slaves were slain. But Soyand Rai himself was killed, and Ayaz and Ali Dayah succeeded in reaching Masud's camp at Naishapur.

Masud had offered to remain content with Khorasan and Iraq provided his name was given precedence in the Khutba, but on receiving a harsh reply from his brother, he decided to march on Ghaznin. Mohammad, on his side, advanced from the capital to Takinabad, where he passed the month of Ramazan. But his strongest supporters, Yusuf bin Subuktigin, a brother of the late Sultan, Amir Ali Khashawand and the Wazir Hasnak, decided to make a belated attempt to please Masud by a betrayal of their own candidate. Two days after the Eid, on the night of October 3, they dragged him out of his tent, sent him to a fort of Kandhar, and then advanced to welcome his brother at Herat. Masud, however, refused to overlook the fault of those who had conspired against him for years. Mohammad was blinded by his brother's order. Amir Ali Kheshawand was put to death and Yusuf bin Subuktigin was thrown into prison where he died.

Hasnak was reserved for the disgrace of a public execution at Balkh. Masud recalled Fall of Hasnak. his father's famous Wazir, Khwaja Ahmad bin Hasan Maimandi, from his Indian prison and entrusted him with the office he had held for eighteen years with such dignity and power. The fate of the fallen Wazir, so graphically described by Baihaki, won the sympathy of all hearts. After weeks of hard and degrading imprisonment, Hasnak was summoned to the diwan where the great Khwaja behaved with extraordinary politeness. He was asked to sign a bond giving up all his property to the Sultan and the two Wazirs parted with a touching forgiveness and affection. "In the time of Sultan Mahmud," Hasnak apologized, "and by his orders, I ridiculed the Khwaja; it was a fault but I had no help but to obey. The post of Wazir was given to me, though it was no place for me. Still I formed no design against the Khwaja and I always favoured his people. I am weary of life but some care ought to be taken of my children and my family and the Khwaja must forgive me." He burst into tears and the Khwaja's eyes were filled with tears also. "You are forgiven," he replied, "but you must not be so dejected for happiness is still possible. I have considered and accept it of the Almighty: I will take care of your family if you are doomed." But the Sultan had made up his mind and the intrigues of Bu Sahl Zauzni, the minister of war, left the issue in no doubt. While passing through Syria on his return-journey from Mecca during the reign of Sultan Mahmud, Hasnak had received a robe of honour from the anti-Caliph of Egypt, and this had laid him open to the charge of being a Carmathian. The Caliph of Bagdad had protested but Mahmud, who knew Hasnak's rationalistic beliefs, would not allow him to be punished for an imputation so baseless.

"Write to this doting old Caliph," Mahmud had ordered his secretary, "that for the sake of the Abbasides I have meddled with all the world. I am hunting for Carmathians, and whenever one is found who is proved to be so, he is impaled. If it was proved that Hasnak is a Carmathian, the Commander of the Faithful would soon learn of what had happened to him. But I have brought him up and he stands on an equality with my sons and my brothers. If he is a Carmathian, so am I also." The old charge was now revived. Two men were dressed up as messengers from the Caliph demanding Hasnak's death as a Carmathian, and Masud, with pretended reluctance, acceded to the Caliph's demand. But everybody knew the truth. "If Masud mounts the throne, let me be hanged," Hasnak had declared in the days of his arrogant power; and Masud having succeeded, Hasnak had to mount 'the steed he had never ridden before.'

At the foot of the scaffold Hasnak threw off his coat and shirt. 'His body was white as silver and his face like hundreds of thousands of pictures.'

A Ghaznavide execution.

All men were crying with grief. He replied neither to the insults of his enemies nor to the questions asked, but his lips were seen moving in some silent prayer. He was made to wear a helmet and vizor lest his head, which was to be sent to the Caliph, should be battered beyond recognition by the stones the public was expected to throw. But the public, barring a few vagabonds hired by the government, threw no stones. A great uproar would have arisen, if the royal horsemen had not prevented it. His fellow-citizens, the Naishapurians, wept bitterly when the hangman cast a rope round his neck and suffocated him. For seven years Hasnak hung from the gibbet. His corpse dried up; the bones of his feet dropped off, and 'not a remnant of him was left to be taken down and buried in the usual way—no one knew where his head was or where his body.' A last touch to the tragedy was given by Hasnak's mother who refused to weep as women weep; but a deep cry of anguish burst from her lips when she was told of his death. "What a fortune was my son's!" she exclaimed, "A king like Mahmud gave him this world, and one like Masud the next."

Masud now seemed as secure as his father had ever been. He had a commanding personality and a strong and unbending resolution. He was surrounded by a body of efficient and loyal officers, who had served his father for years. He had no rival to fear. The government appeared strong in the extent of its territory, its armies, its revenue and its mass of hoarded wealth. Nevertheless a careful observer would have found the forces of decay everywhere at work. It was not easy to wield Mahmud's sceptre. Masud paid no heed to the advice of his wisest counsellors. His superb self-confidence gave way to a senseless panic in the hour of danger and showed him to be totally lacking in that calmness of nerve which comes through the strength of the intellect rather than the power of muscle and bone. He struck thoughtlessly and in the wrong quarter with a total incapacity to distinguish the most dangerous of his enemies from the most contemptible of his foes. The firmness with which he wielded his axe and his spear in the field of battle shone in tragic contrast with the folly with which he directed his campaigns and destroyed the morale of his troops before the enemy could fall upon them. Equally lacking in the gifts of a statesman and a general, Masud would have done well to rely on the judgment of a wiser man. Khwaja Hasan Maimandi, restored to more than his former glory, directed the government with efficiency so far as civil affairs were concerned. But the Khwaja never meddled in military matters; his death in 1037 left Masud free to mismanage things to his heart's content; and within ten years of his father's death Masud had lost his army and his empire and was flying a helpless fugitive to an inhospitable land.

Masud and his difficulties.

The two dangers Masud had to fear were the Rais of Hindustan in the east and the Seljuqs in the west. The former, terrorised rather than subdued by Mahmud, were sure to wake up when the invincible conqueror was no more. But they were a lethargic people and would in any case remain on the defensive. Masud's obvious plan should have been to crush the Seljuqs before it was too late and leave the Rais for a more favourable season. But while the Seljuq peril was growing apace, he preferred to divert his strength towards Hindustan in a useless emulation of his father's achievements, who, with a wisdom and a generalship denied to his son, had struck simultaneously in the east and the west. We will first describe the comparative prosaic events of the Punjab.

The peculiar position of this Indian province had induced Mahmud to take the extraordinary step of separating its Administration of the Punjab. civil and military authorities. All administrative affairs were placed in the hands of Abul Hasan Ali, known as Qazi Shirazi, a man of commonplace capacity, whom the Sultan in one of his humours had thought of pitting against the august dignity of the great Khwaja, while Ali Ariyaruk, a Turkish general of remarkable dash and courage, was appointed Commander-in-chief. The Qazi and the General were independent of each other and in direct subordination to Ghaznin. To keep them both in check, Bul Kasim bul Hakam was appointed superintendent of the news-carriers and his duty was to report everything important to Ghaznin. This division of power was intended to keep the province in check by preventing the concentration of authority in a single hand, while by the appointment of a General, whose sole business was to wage war against the Thakurs (Rais), Mahmud sought to make the plunder of Hindustan a permanent affair. The plan miscarried. Ariyaruk bore down all opposition and made himself supreme; the Qazi in retaliation dressed himself in military clothes, but was relegated to a secondary position. The soft words of the Khwaja, however, succeeded in alluring Ariyaruk to Balkh, where he was arrested and thrown into prison (March 1031).

The instructions of the Khwaja to the new Commander-in-chief, Ahmad Nialtigin, could leave him in no doubt that cordial co-operation between him and the Qazi would be looked upon with suspicion at Ghaznin. "This self-sufficient fellow of Shiraz wishes the generals to be under his command. You must not say anything to any person respecting revenue or political matters, but you must perform all the duties of a commander, so that the fellow may not be able to put his hand on your sinews and drag you down." On Nialtigin's arrival at Lahore, the strife between the civil and military authorities recommenced. The Qazi complained of the semi-regal state which Nialtigin was keeping up, of his Turkoman slaves and of his possible designs. But the Khwaja supported Nialtigin, and the general in high spirits led a campaign into Hindustan. Marching with the rapidity he had learnt from Banaras, his master, he crossed the Jamna and the Ganges and appeared unexpectedly before Banaras. It would have been dangerous to remain long in the city, but he succeeded in holding it from morning to midday, during which short interval the markets of drapers, jewellers and perfumers were plundered, 'though it was impossible to do more.' The Qazi found his opportunity. He sent confidential reports to Ghaznin of the immense wealth Nialtigin had obtained and withheld from the Sultan. "What his intentions are nobody knows, but he calls himself a son of Mahmud." Fear or ambition actually incited Nialtigin to treason, and on returning to Lahore he besieged the Qazi in the fort of Mandkakar. It was a bid for independence. The Sultan consulted his high officers but none of them was inclined to lead a campaign to India in the heat and the rains (July, 1033). "When one runs away from Ahmad Nialtigin, there cannot be much honour left," the minister of war remarked, "but the general sent against him will have enough to do, for there is a strong force at Lahore." Ashamed of the pusillanimity of his colleagues, a Hindu general stepped forward and offered his services. They were gratefully accepted by the Sultan.

The career of Tilak, the Hindu, shows the rapidity with which Hindus and Mussalmans were both forgetting their religious differences in the service of a common king and the superbly oriental feeling of loyalty to the salt. Though the son of a barber, he was of handsome appearance, had studied 'dissimulation, amours and witchcraft' in Kashmir and wrote excellent Hindi and Persian. He had first entered the service of Qazi Shirazi but left it for the better prospects offered by the Khwaja, to whom he acted as secretary and interpreter and was entrusted by him with the most delicate affairs. Even the Khwaja's fall did him no harm, for Mahmud wanted clever and energetic young men and Tilak's fortune kept on improving. Soyand Rai, the general of the Indian troops, took the wrong side on the succession question, and when he was slain in the skirmish against Ayaz, Masud appointed Tilak to the vacant post. 'Thus he obtained the name of a man.' "Kettle-drums were beaten in his quarters according to the custom of Hindu chiefs and banners with gilded tops were granted." He had an army under his command, the tent and the umbrella of a Ghaznavide general, and sat in the charmed circle of the Sultan's confidential officers. "Wise men do not wonder at such facts," says the reflective Baihaki, "because nobody is born great—men became such. This Tilak had excellent qualities and all the time he lived he sustained no injury on account of being the son of a barber".

Tilak drew up the plan of his campaign, and as soon as it was sanctioned by the Sultan, hastened against the rebel. Nialtigin was unable to hold Lahore and fled towards the desert, and Tilak followed close on his heels with an army consisting mostly of Hindus. He set a price of 500,000 dirhams on Nialtigin's head, cut off the right hands of his Mussalman supporters whenever they fell into his clutches and promised a pardon to all who would desert him. This policy had the result desired. Nialtigin was defeated in battle and his Turkoman soldiers came over to Tilak in a body. 'The span of Ahmad's life was narrowed, his men deserted him and at last matters reached so far that the Jats and every kind of infidel joined in the pursuit.' He was ultimately slain by the Jats while attempting to cross the Indus. Masud abolished the plan of two independent jurisdictions in the Punjab and assigned the government to his son, Prince Majdud, with supreme command of civil as well as military affairs. Nevertheless the province remained in a state of turmoil and disorder. Ghaznavide garrisons held the towns: Hinduism and freedom reigned supreme in the countryside. Nothing else was possible when the government was so incompatible with the spirit of the people.

In the winter of 1037 Masud decided on an expedition against Hansi. The condition of the Punjab was no doubt unsatisfactory, but the capture of another Hindu fort could not make the government stable. The Seljuqs were becoming more powerful every day and the Khwaja advised him to postpone the Indian venture till he had subdued his western enemies. "If my lord should not go to Khorasan, if the Turkomans should conquer a province, or if they should conquer even a village, and do that which they are accustomed to do, namely, mutilate, slaughter and burn, ten 'holy wars' at Hansi would not compensate." But Masud was deaf to all advice. He said he had made a vow and must fulfil it. He marched by way of Kabul to the bank of the Jhelum where an illness, owing to which he gave up drinking for a time, prevented him from moving further for a fortnight. Another march of three weeks brought him to the virgin fort of Hansi. The garrison made a desperate defence and relaxed no effort, but the fort was stormed after a siege of ten days and its treasure divided among the army. Masud next marched against Sonpat, but its Rai, Dipal Hari, fled away and his city was annexed to the Punjab. Another chief, named Ram, sent treasures to the invader but apologised that he could not come in person owing to old age and weakness.

On returning to Ghaznin, the Sultan discovered that during his absence the Seljuqs had plundered Taliquan and Fariyab and were besieging Ray. He felt ashamed of his Indian expedition and promised to advance against them in the coming summer. The Ghaznin-Seljuq contest was rapidly drawing to a head.

“The rustic, perhaps the wisest, portion of the Turkomans,” says Gibbon, “continued to dwell in the tents of their ancestors, while the Turks of the court and the city were refined by business and softened by pleasure.” No love existed between the two sections of the race. The civilised Turkish population of the great cities of Turkestan and the Turkish peasantry, who had learnt the value of agriculture, found the ways of their untamed brethren intolerable. For two centuries the chiefs of Mawaraun Nahr had acted as the frontier outposts against the barbaric Tartars. But the rise of the Ghaznavide empire had greatly weakened their strength and it was impossible for them to discharge their former function with efficiency. The remnant of the Seljuq tribes left in Mawaraun Nahr was intensely hated by the neighbouring chiefs, whose territories they constantly raided. The sons of Ali Tigin, who had re-established the power of their family over Samarkand and Bokhara, refused to tolerate them, and the ruler of Jund, named Shah, for whom they had an innate enmity, made a sudden raid on their wandering camp, and with a double portion of their vindictive animosity, slew eight thousand of their males at a single stroke while seven hundred men, who escaped his wrath, fled to other side of the Oxus. But in 1031 Yusuf Qadr Khan of Kashghar died and in the following year Altuntash, the Ghaznavide general whom Mahmud had appointed governor of Khwarazm, was ordered by Masud to advance against Ali Tigin's sons and in a fierce battle, which cost him his life, he crushed their army and deprived them of Bokhara. Altuntash's son, Harun, whom Masud appointed to his father's post, repaid his kindness by treason and soon met his punishment. The result of these events was to remove every power that might have prevented the march of the Tartar tribes from eastern Turkestan across Mawaraun Nahr to the tempting fields of Persia. The officers of the empire proved totally incapable of either exterminating or subduing the migratory hordes that had crossed the Oxus. They had no settled habitation and it was impossible to crush them in a battle. They dispersed and reunited with remarkable ease. And yet it is easy to imagine what the unexpected raid of the Tartar shepherds, who came burning and plundering, meant to a population accustomed to law and order.

The leadership of the immigrants naturally fell to the Seljuqs, and in 1036 three chiefs of the tribe, tired of the continuous conflict and hard-pressed for land, sent a petition to the Sultan asking for the districts of Nisa and Farawah, the land between the mountains on the northwest of Khorasan, the Oxus and the desert of Kara-Kum, to be granted to them as pasture. This humble petition signed by Beghu, brother of Israel bin Seljuq, and Beghu's two nephews, Tughril and Daud, concluded with a desperate threat, 'because they had no place on earth and none remained to them.' Masud bitterly complained of his father's error in bringing these camel-drivers into the empire, and while beguiling the Seljuqs with soft words, sent a force of 15000 against them. Begtaghdi, the Ghaznavide general, defeated the Seljuqs after a stubborn battle, but when his men had dispersed in search of plunder, they returned from the mountain defiles and practically annihilated his army. There was no alternative but to concede the Seljuq demands; but their ambitions expanded with their success, and they began to aspire for the cities of Merv and Sarakhs, situated on the frontier of their territory, and even for the whole of Khorasan. But Masud, when he should have concentrated his forces on the southern side of the Khorasan hills, preferred a Pyrrhic victory over the Hindus of Hansi; and during his absence in 1036-37, the plunder of Taliqan and Fariyab enabled the Seljuqs to organise their strength, and placed them in a position to challenge Masud's power in northern Persia.

In the spring of 1037 Subashi, governor of Khorasan, was ordered by Masud to proceed against the Seljuqs. He protested that he was too weak, but the Sultan insisted on his order being obeyed, and the reluctant governor led his troops to the expected defeat. At one blow Sarakhs, Merv and the whole of Khorasan came into the hands of the Seljuqs. Tughril was crowned king at Naishapur. A permanent peace between Masud and the Seljuqs was now impossible and a victory gained by Masud at Sarakhs in the following year only delayed the last stage of the contest.

In the summer of 1040 the Seljuqs collected around Sarakhs, and Masud, though he had made no preparations, resolved to march against them. A terrible famine was raging and his advisers requested him to postpone the campaign. Masud refused to listen. The Seljuqs retreated as he advanced and concentrated their forces at Merv. But Masud's army became more disorganised at every stage. Grain had to be brought from distant places; the heat was unbearable; the enemy had filled up the wells and harassed the Ghaznavides on every side. Most of the men were unhorsed; no discipline or order remained; and finally at Dandaniquan, near Merv, Masud was surrounded by the Seljuqs and had to offer battle. His generals disgraced themselves by treason and flight, and the men followed the example of their officers. 'The Turkish troops went one way, and the Indians another, and neither Arabs nor Kurds could be distinguished.' Only the royal body-guard remained round the Sultan, who surprised friend and foe by his valour, and strength, and spear in hand, struck down all who came within the reach of his arms. But the field was irretrievably lost.

"I saw Prince Maudud, son of the Sultan," says the historian, "galloping here and there, and endeavouring to rally his men, but no one gave ear to him for everyone was for himself." The Sultan managed to extricate himself and reached his capital fearfully shaken and terrorised. The Empire of Ghaznin was no more.

The officers who had deserted the Sultan on the battlefield were imprisoned. Prince Maudud was depatched with an army to Balkh, but Masud himself was so afraid of the Seljuqs that he dared not remain at Ghaznin. He sent Majdud to Multan and ordered Prince Izad-yar to hold the Afghans in check, and then with the royal harem and the choicest treasures of Sultan Mahmud loaded on three hundred camels, he started for Lahore. Everyone advised the Sultan against the step. His desertion of the capital would throw everything into anarchy and disorder. The journey itself was full of danger. "I have no very high opinion of the fidelity of the Hindus," the Wazir Khwaja Mohammad bin Abdus Samad remarked, "and what faith has my lord in his other servants, that he should show his treasures to them in the desert?" But misfortune had only increased Masud's obstinacy, and he caustically accused his officers of treason. At the pass of Marigalah the Wazir's ominous words were fulfilled. A number of Turkish and Hindu slaves plundered a part of the royal treasure; and seeing that their crime would not be pardoned by Masud, they besieged him in the inn where he was staying and placed his brother, the blind Mohammad, on the throne. Masud was captured and sent to the fort of Giri where he was soon after put to death.

Placed on the throne after nine years of imprisonment, the blind Mohammad contented himself with dry bread while the affairs were directed by his son, Ahmad, who was reputed to be mad. But Maudud gave short shrift to his father's murderers. He hurried from Balkh to Ghaznin and thence marched towards the Indus. Mohammad's army, which had marched to meet him, was defeated at Nagrahar, and Mohammad and his sons were captured and slain on the spot (1041). Maudud built an inn and a village on the site of his victory, which he named Fathabad, and returned to Ghaznin with his father's coffin. But the battle of Nagrahar had not placed the Punjab in his hands. His brother, Majdud, whom the late Sultan had appointed governor of Multan, lost no time in consolidating his power; and with the help of the famous Ayaz, he captured Lahore and established his government from the Indus to Hansi and Thanesewar. Maudud marched on Lahore in 1042, but Majdud arrived just in time to save it. A critical battle was imminent and Maudud's amirs began to waver. But on the morning of the Eid of Sacrifice Majdud was found dead in his tent; a few days later Ayaz also died: and the Punjab passed into Maudud's hands without a battle. But further troubles were yet in store.

It was not to be expected that the Hindu Rais

The Hindu Revival: Hansi, Thaneswar, Nagarkot &
Lahore.

would fail to take advantage of the troubles of their enemy, now that the Seljuqs had made their task so easy. The Empire of Ghaznin, shrunk to the dimensions of a little kingdom, was torn by civil dissensions and in a perpetual danger of being swallowed up by its western neighbours. Maudud was in no condition to defend his Indian possessions; and the Rais of the Punjab and other lands, 'whom fear of the Mussalmans had driven like foxes to the forest, again raised their heads with confident courage.' The tide turned rapidly. A Hindu confederacy, headed by the Rai of Delhi, captured Hansi and Thaneswar; Ghaznavide officers were driven off from town and country; the oppressive despondency that had taken possession of the Hindu mind disappeared; and the Rais determined to crush the prestige of the invader by a victory that would bring joy to every village of Hindustan. Of the sacred places of Hinduism which Sultan Mahmud had conquered, Nagarkot was the only one he had kept in his hands. To the average Hindu mind the Muslim possession of Nagarkot symbolised the conquest of religion by brute force, and it was the first duty of the confederates to put an end to this standing insult to their creed. The army of triumphant Hinduism marched to the foot of the fort and laid siege to it with all the sincerity of faith. The Muslim garrison prepared for resistance, but its appeals for help to the Amirs of Lahore went unheeded and it had no alternative but to capitulate on terms that saved its life and honour. The temple was rebuilt. A new idol was placed on the pedestal. The news spread through all Hindustan. Hindu pilgrims were jubilant and once more came to visit it in crowds. 'The market of idolatory was busier than ever.' Islam had become a losing cause and it seemed as if another decisive blow would drive it off from the land. The Ghaznavide amirs of Lahore, busy in fighting each other, had forgotten their allegiance to Maudud and turned a deaf ear to the prayers of the garrison of Nagarkot. But when they heard that ten thousand Hindu cavalry supported by a large infantry was marching against them, they at last awoke to the insecurity of their position, and taking an oath of loyalty to Maudud, collected their forces with the determination to defend their city to the last. The Hindu army retired without pressing the siege. Thus Lahore and the large towns west of the Ravi were saved. Over the rest of the country Hinduism soon forgot the Mussalmans. Such traces of Islam as Mahmud might have left in India were simply swept off. On the other hand, the Hindus learnt no lessons from their adversity. No national government arose to end the civil wars of Aryavarta and after a century and a half Shahabuddin Ghorî found the Hindu Rais as disunited as ever.

The later history of the kingdom of Ghaznin need not detain us for long. Its petty princes were content to eke out a humble existence under the shadow of the Seljuq Empire; its unending palace intrigues were a source of derision to its enemies

Later History of the Kingdom of Ghaznin.

and of despair to its friends. Sultan Maudud died in December, 1049, and his son, Masud II, a child of four years, was overthrown by Maudud's brother, Abul Hasan Ali, who in his turn was defeated by Abdur Rashid, a son of Sultan Mahmud, in 1051. In 1054 Abdur Rashid was put to death by his general Tughril, the traitor, but the usurper was slain before he had occupied the throne for forty days. Next Farrukhzad, son of Masud, was brought out of prison and reigned for seven years (1052-1059), while his brother and successor, Sultan Raziuddin Ibrahim, a pious king, was blessed with a long reign of over forty years which came to an end in 1099. He was blessed also with thirty-six sons and forty daughters, and the latter, for want of suitable princes, were married to Saiyids and pious scholars. Sultan Ibrahim is credited with two Indian expeditions of which he led the second in person (1079-1080). Ajodhan, the present Patan of Shaikh Farid of Shakarganj, was reached, and marching thence the Sultan captured the fort of Rupar, situated on a hill with a river on one side and a thorny forest full of snakes on the other. Still more poetic was the conquest of Darah, a town of Khorasan colonists, exiled from Persia to India by the Afrasiyab of the Shahnamah! "They worshipped idols and passed their lives in sin;" but their city was considered impregnable and consequently the Rais of India never succeeded in plundering the foreigners in their midst. But Ibrahim cut his way through the thick forest that surrounded Darah and reduced it by force. Apart from this somewhat mythic exploit, Sultan Ibrahim was a sane and sensible man, who never forgot the serious limitations of his power and secured for his subjects a long period of uninterrupted peace.

Ibrahim's son, Alauddin Masud, married a sister of the Seljuq Emperor, Sultan Sanjar, and died after a peaceful reign of sixteen years in 1115. His son, Arsalan Shah, signalled his accession by putting his brothers to death. Only one of them, Bahram Shah, succeeded in escaping to his uncle Sanjar, who drove out Arsalan and placed Bahram on the throne. But Arsalan returned and besieged Bahram and Sanjar once more marched to Ghaznin (1117). Arsalan was captured and a year later put to death. Muizzuddin Bahram Shah was a magnificent king. He twice defeated the governor of the Punjab, Mohammad Bahalim. Shaikh Nizami Ganjavi dedicated the Makhzanul Asrar to him and the Kalila and Dimna was translated from Arabic into Persian during his reign. But a quarrel with the chiefs of Ghor led to the sack of Ghaznin and Sultan Bahram's reign of forty-one years ended in disgrace and ruin (1152).

Meanwhile, like all things mortal, the Empire of the Seljuqs had been progressing through its career of expansion, consolidation and decay. The battle of Dandaniqan had placed the Persian provinces of the Ghaznavide Empire in their hands. Sultan Tughril (1039-1063), the first Emperor of the dynasty, fixed his capital at Ray and assigned Khorasan to his brother, Daud Jafar (Chaghr) Beg. The ease with which the conquered people reconciled themselves to the new dynasty is a credit at once to the moral character of the House of Seljuq and the captivating power of civilization. The new rulers threw off their barbaric ways and conformed to the time-honoured traditions of Persian monarchy; the military vigour of the Turk combined with the administrative genius of the Persian to establish an empire that came into contact and conflict with the anti-Caliphs of Egypt and the Byzantine Empire in the west and the infidels of Cathay in the east; and in the century of peace that followed no one regretted the fall of the Ghaznavide administration. "It would be superfluous," says Gibbon, "to praise the valour of a Turk, and the ambition of Tughril was equal to his valour. In his own dominions Tughril was the father of his soldiers and people; by a firm and equal administration Persia was relieved from the evils of anarchy; and the same hands which had been embrued in blood became the guardians of justice and the public peace." The kings of Ghaznin were allowed to eke out their years of inglorious existence but the Mussalmans and Christians of Iraq and Asia Minor felt the hand of 'the Conquering Turk.' Azarbaijan was annexed to the Empire; the power of the Buwaihids, which Mahmud had crushed in Isfahan and Ray, was finally annihilated in Baghdad and the Commander of the Faithful, relieved from the vexations to which he had been exposed by the presence and poverty of this Persian dynasty, bestowed on Tughril the titles of 'Sultanud Doulah' and 'Yamin-i Amirul Mominin.' A Seljuq general, I-tsiz, overran Syria and even reached the Nile, while the Byzantine Empire felt the vigour of the Turkish troops across a frontier of six hundred miles from Taurus to Erzurum. The contest was, however, undecided when Tughril died at the age of seventy-two.

Alp Arsalan (1063-1072), son of Daud, who succeeded to the empire of his uncle after a brief period of civil wars, continued the eastern conquests of Tughril. Armenia and Georgia were annexed and three years (1068-1071) of war decided the fate of the Asiatic possessions of Constantinople. The initiative was taken by the Emperor, Romanus Diogenese, who advanced with a hundred thousand soldiers and an auxiliary force of disorderly allies. After three well fought campaigns the Turks were driven beyond the Euphrates, and when the Sultan advanced against him with forty thousand men, the Emperor contemptuously ordered the barbarian to cede the palace and city of Ray as the condition of peace. But the Sultan's "rapid and skilful evolutions distressed and dismayed the superior numbers of the Greeks," and at the battle of Mulazgird (Madikerb) the Turkish veterans crushed the power of their vain and disorganised opponents beyond the possibility of redemption. Romanus Diogenese, brought a captive to the court, was treated with that superb generosity which Alp Arsalan showed his fallen enemies. Having accomplished his western mission, the Sultan marched eastward for the conquest of Mawaraun Nahr. But an assassin's dagger cut short the Sultan's life after he had crossed the Oxus and brought his conquering career to an untimely end after a reign of nine years and a half.

The reign of Alp Arsalan's son, Malik Shab (1072-Malik Shah. 1092), was a period of prosperity and peace, and shows the Seljuq Empire at its best. The unrealised scheme of his father was accomplished by the conquest of Mawaraun Nahr and Malik Shah's Khutba was read beyond the Jaxartes at Kashghar. But during the rest of his reign the Sultan kept perambulating his extensive empire and supervising its civil administration so that "few departed from his diwan without reward and none without justice." The calendar which had fallen into disorder was reformed by a committee of mathematicians (including the astronomer-poet, Omar Khayyam), who inaugurated the 'Jalali era' of Malik Shah, 'a computation of time, which surpasses the Julian, and approaches the accuracy of the Gregorian style.' With the names of Alp Arslan and Malik Shah is intimately associated the name of their great minister, Nizamul Mulk, author of the Siyasat Namah* and one of the most famous Wazirs of the East. Deeply learned in all the political wisdom of the day, a patron of literature and art to whom the 'Nizamiah' University of Baghdad owed its establishment, Nizamul Mulk served the Seljuq dynasty with zeal and devotion for thirty years and won for it the loyalty of its subjects and the grateful remembrance of posterity. But the influence of the queen, Turkan Khatun, who wished to secure the succession of her son, Mahmud, alienated the Sultan's mind from him, and at the age of ninety-three years the venerable

---

* The Siyasat Namah is sometimes supposed to be a treatise on political science, but it is really a book on political trickery and a violent pamphlet against the 'heretics.' Its historical value is very great.

statesman was dismissed by his master, accused by his enemies, and murdered by a fanatic. Malik Shah himself died in the following month.

Malik Shah's two sons, Barkiyaruk (1092-1104) and Mohammad (1104-1117), were succeeded by their brother, Sanjar (1117-1157), a great, 'dignified and mighty monarch,' under whom affairs again came back to 'the highway of legality and the beaten track of equity and justice,' from which they had been unhappily deflected during the reigns of his predecessors. Irak, Khorasan and Mawaraun Nahr increased in population and prosperity; the empire was more extensive than it had been ever before. Nevertheless Sanjar's long reign was a period of disintegration and decay. Provincial governors (atabaks) began to aspire for independence; a new race of Turkomans poured across the Jaxartes; and by slow degrees the foundations of the Empire were sapped. Sanjar struggled valiantly against the rising deluge and won seventeen out of the nineteen great battles he is said to have fought. But he did not know how to take advantage of his successes, and his defeats were, consequently, more important than his victories. In 1141 a number of Karakhata-i tribes, who had migrated into Turkesten, rebelled against the Empire. Sanjar was defeated near Samarkand and the whole of Mawaraun Nahr passed into infidel hands. Another body of emigrants, the Ghazz Turks, defeated and captured the Sultan in 1153, and carried him about as a captive in their camp for three years. When the Sultan at last escaped to his capital, the empire had ceased to exist. Khorasan had been devastated by the Ghazis; the atabaks had thrown off their allegiance to the central power; and the last of the "Great Seljuqs" closed his eyes after a strenuous life of seventy-two years spent in an unsuccessful defence of the work of his ancestors and the civilisation they had inherited.

Under the protection of the Seljuq Dynasty, Persian civilisation reached a height which it has never since attained. The middle of the twelfth century witnessed the final extinction of the kingdom of Ghaznin and the collapse of the Seljuqian empire. The kingdoms of Khwarazm and Ghor rose on the ground thus left vacant, but neither had grown to its full stature when the Muslim world was overwhelmed by the Mongol barbarians.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Early Authorities :

(a) Political.

1. Akhbar ud Duwali'l Munqatia :
by Jamaluddin Abul Hasan Ali ibni Zafir (Early 7th century A.H. Throws light on Mahmud's relations with the Caliph), MS. British Museum Or. 3685.
2. Al Kamil fit Tarikh :
by Izzuddin ibn al Asir (1160-1234). A General History of Islam upto 1231 A.D., edited by C. J. Tornberg (Leyden 1867-74).
3. Al Muntazam fi Tawarikhil Muluk wal umam :
by Ibn ul Jawzi (ob. 1201 A.D.) (Mahmud's relations with the Caliph), MS. Berlin 9436.
4. Adab ul Muluk wa Kifayat ul Mamluk :
by Fakhr-i Mudabbir (Early 13th century. A treatise on the art of war ; contains historical anecdotes relating to Mahmud), MSS—India Office 647, British Museum Add. 16853. (Also called : Adab ul Harb wash Shuja'a).

5. Kitab ul Hind :

by Abu Raihan Alberuni ; Arabic text, edited by E. C. Sachau (London 1887), Translated into English by E. C. Sachau as Al-biruni's India, 2 vol. (London 1910).

6. Majmaul Ansab :

by Mohammad bin Ali. (Composed in 1333 A.D. contains an account of Mahmud's predecessors), MS. Bibl. Nat. Supplement 1278.

7. Miratus zaman fi Tarikh ul Ayyam :

by Sibte ibn al Jawzi (1186-1256), a grandson of Ibn al Jawzi. (Contains quotations from Mahmud's letters of victory to the Caliph), MS. British Museum Or. 4619.

Extracts ed. and tr. in Recueil des historiens des croisades (Vol III Paris 1884), Part VIII reproduced in facsimile by James R. Jewett (Chicago, 1907).

8. Rahatus Sudur :

by Abu Bakr Mohd. bin Ali ar Rawandi; edited by Dr. Mohd. Iqbal (Cambridge 1922).

9. Siyasat Namah :

by Nizam ul Mulk Tusi (composed in 1092 A.D)—edited by Charles Scheffer (Paris, 1897); edited by Khalkhali (Tehran).

10. Tabaqat-i-Nasiri :

by Minhaj us Siraj Juzjani (written about the year 1260 A.D)—edited by N. Less, Khadim Hussain and Abdul Hai (Bib. Indica, Calcutta 1864)—Translated into English by H. G. Raverty (Bib. Indica, Calcutta 1897).

11. Tarikh-i Al-i Subuktigin :

by Abul Fazl Baihaqi—edited by W. H. Morley (Bib. Indica, Calcutta 1862)—edited by Agha Said Naficy (Tehran 1327 A.H.)

12. Tarikh-i-Yamini :

by Abun Nasr Mohd. bin Mohd. al Jabbar al-Utbi.—Arabic text edited with annotations by Ahmad Manini. (Cairo 1286 A.H.)—Arabic text (Lahore 1300 A.H.)—Persian Translation by Abul Sharaf Nasib bin Zafar bin Sa'd (Tehran 1271)—English Translation by Rev. James Reynolds (Oriental Translation Fund, London 1838 A.D.).

13. Tarikh-i-Guzidah :

by Hamdullah Mustawfi, edited by E. G. Browne (Gibb Memorial Series, London 1913).

14. Tarikh-i Jahan Gusha :

by Alauddin Ata Malik bin Mohd. Juwaini.—Gibb Memorial Series 1912.—Tehran 1351 A.H.

15. Zain-ul-Akhbar :

by Abu Said Abdul Hai bin Abdul Haq bin Mahmud Gardizi (written under Sultan Abdur Rashid Ghaznavi 441-444 A.H.)—MS. Bodleian Libraby Quseley 240—edited by Dr. M. Nazim Siddique.

(b) Non-Political.

16. Chahar Maqala :

by Nizami-i-Aruzi-i-Samarqandi—edited by Mirza Mehdi. (London 1910)—Translated by E. G. Browne (London 1921)

17. Diwan-i-Farrukhi :

Abul Hassan Ali Farrukhi (ob. 1038)—Tehran (1301—1302 A.H.)—MS. India Office 1841.—Intikhab-i-Farrukhi (Lahore 1354 A.H.)

18. Diwan-i-Masud Sa'd Salman :

(ob. 1121 A.D.) (Valuable for later Ghaznavide period).—MS. British Museum Egerton 701.—edited (Tehran 1318 A.H.)

19. Diwan-i-Syed Hassan :

(for later Ghaznavides)—MS. India Office No. 931.

20. Diwan-i-Uzman-i-Mukhtari :

(ob. 1149 A.D. or 1159 A.D. Valuable for Bahram Shah's reign)—MS. in Bankipore Library.

21. Gulistan :

Shaikh Sadi—Persian Text (Lucknow, Delhi etc.).

22. Hadigatus Shir :

by Sanai Ghaznavi (ob. 1131 A.D. Valuable for later Ghaznavide period)—B. R. A. S. Calcutta—Bombay 1275 A.H. —Lucknow 1304 A.H. Diwan i Sanai : Tehran, 1274 A.H.

23. Jawami-ul Hikayat wa Lawamiur Riwayat :

by Sadid uddin Mohd. al Awfi—British Museum MS. Add. 16862.——Introduction by Nizamuddin, London 1929.

24. Kulliyat-i-Anwari :

Auhaduddin Ali Anwari (ob. 1191 A.D. Valuable for later Ghaznavides)—Tabriz 1260, 1266 A.H.—Lucknow 1880.

25. Lubab-ul-Albab :
by Mohd. Awfi, edited by E. G. Browne and Mirza Mohd. ibn Abdul Wahab Qazwini (London 1903-1906).
26. Mantiq ut Tair :
by Shaikh Farid uddin Attar, edited by Garcin de Tassy, 1857—Kulliyat, Lucknow 1877.
27. Makhzan ul Asrar :
by Nizami Ganjawi (ob. 1202).—edited by N. Bland (London 1844).
28. Shah Nama :
by Firdausi (ob. 1021 A.D.)—edited by Turner Macan (Calcutta 1829)—edited by Mohl. (Paris 1878).
29. Tazkirat-ul-Auliya :
by Shaikh Fariduddin Attar, edited by Nicholson (London & Leiden 1905-1907).
30. Tazkiratush Shuara :
by Daulat Shah Samarqandi, edited by E. G. Browne (London 1901).
31. Qanun-i Masudi :
by Alberuni. MS. Lytton Library, Muslim University, Aligarh.

II. Later Works :

32. Asarul Wuzara :
by Saifuddin Haji (9th century A.H., account of the Wazirs of Mahmud) MS. India Office No. 1569.

33. Futuhus Salatin :

by Isami--edited by A. Mehdi Hussain, Agra (1938)
—edited by M. Usha, Madras (1950).

34. Habibus Siyar :

by Ghiyasuddin bin Humamuddin alias Khwandmir —Tehran, 1270 A.H.—Bombay, 1857 A.D.

35. Khulasatut Tawarikh :

by Sujan Rai Bhandari,—edited by K. B. Zafar Hasan (Delhi 1918).

36. Kitab tajziyatul amsar wa tajrabatul asar :

by Abdulla bin Fazl ullah Wassaf.—Tabriz (1272
A.H.)—Bombay (1269 A.H.)

37. Kitabul Ibar :

by Ibn Khaldun (written in 1398 A.D.)—Cairo
1284 A.H.

38. Muntakhabut Tawarikh :

by Abdul Qadir Badaoni.—Vol. I—Persian Text, edited by Lees and others (Bib. Indica, Calcutta 1869).—Eng. Trans. by Ranking, (B. Indica).

39. Rauzatus Safa :

by Mohd. bin Khawand Shah alias Mirkhwand.—
Lucknow, 1270-74 A.H.—Tehran, 1874 A.D.—
Partially Translated into English by E. Rehatsek (Oriental Translation Fund, New Series, London, 1891).

40. Tabaqat-i-Akbari :

by Nizamuddin Bakhshi—Bib. Indica (1927-35)—
English Tr. B. De (Bib. Indica).

41. Tarikh-i-Alfi :

by Mulla Ahmad Tattawi and others. MS. I. O. Etbe 110112.

42. Tarikh-i-Ferishta : (Gulshan i Ibrahimi) :

by Mohd. Qasim Hindu Shah Ferishta—Text, Lucknow 1865.—Poona 1832.—English translation by J. Briggs as “History of the Rise of Mahomedan Power in India.” (Calcutta 1910) (A most unreliable translation)

III. Modern Works :

43. A History of Persia :

by Sir Percy Sykes, (London, 1930)

44. Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire :

by Edward Gibbon.

45. History of India as told by its own historians :

Sir H. M. Elliot. Vol. II, edited by Dowson, (London).

46. Literary History of Persia :

by E. G. Browne. (London 1902-1924).

47. Sher-ul Ajam :

by Shibli Numani. (5 Volumes) (Aligarh, 1324-1337 A.H).

48. Turkestan down to the Mongol Invasion :

by W. Barthold, English Tr. by H. A. R. Gibb. (London 1928).

49. The Ency. Britannica : article on "Seljuq" by Prof. Houtsma.
50. The Ency. of Islam :
4 Volumes (London & Leyden 1913).

INDEX.

- Abbasids 9, 63, 91
 Abdul Haq, Maulvi 67(n)
 Abdus Samad 103
 Abdul Malik 12, 13, 22
 Abu Ali Simjuri 16
 Abu Bakr 5
 Abu Bakr Lawik 12
 Abu Ishaq 12, 13
 Abul Fath Daud 25
 Abul Abbas Mamun 38
 Abul Hasan Ali*107
 Abul Hasan, Qazi VII
 Abul Abbas Fasih Ahmad 72
 Abul Fazl 75
 Abu Najm Ahmad Ayaz 98, 104
 Abu Nasr Mishtakan VI-VIII
 Afghanistan 10, 14
 Afghans 103
 Afrasiyab 67, 107
 Ahmadabad 25
 Ahmad Husain bin Mikal 73
 Ahmad Nialtigin 21, 95, 96
 Ahmad Shah Abdali 10
 Ajam 69, 75
 Ajmer 16, 29, 47, 54
 Ajodhan (Patan) 107
 Alamut 8
 Alauddin Jahansoz 34
 Alauddin Masud 108
 Alauddin Ata Malik Juwaini 3
 Alberuni 14, 15, 28, 35, 42, 45(n),
     47(n), 52(n), 53(n) 54(n),
     68, 85-87
 Alexander 43, 65, 66, 70
 Ali 5, 6
 Ali Dayah 89
 Aligarh 67(n)
 Ali Tigin 43, 100
 Ali Ariyaruk 94, 95
 Alptigin 12, 13
 Alp Arsalan 110
 Altuntash 100
 Al-Qadir Billah 35, 36
 Amir Ali 73
 Amir Ali Kheshawand 89-90
 Amir Ismail 17
 Amir Nuh 17, 22
 Anandpal 15, 25, 27-36, 41, 42, 77
 Anatolia 9
 Anhilwara 55, 57
Anwar-i-Suhaili 58(n)
 Arab 6, 9
 Arabia 44, 48, 63, 84
 Aristotle 2, 64
 Armenia 110
 Arsalan Hajib 26, 50
 Arsalan Shah 108
 Aryavarta 81, 106
 Aryan 5, 6
 Asadi 68
 Asia Minor 84, 104, 109
 Asjadi 66
 Asni 41, 42
 Azarbaijan 109

Baghdad 3, 109, 111
 Bahram Shah 108
 Baihaqi VI, 21, 60(n) 90. 97
 Balanath 37
 Balanath, hill of 37
 Balik 50
 Balkh 17, 59, 71, 89, 95, 103, 104
 Balkh, battle of 26, 27
 Banaras 86, 95, 96
 Banda 42
 Ban-ganga 31
 Barhatigin 14
 Bari 45
 Barkiyaruk 112
 Barran (Bulandshahr) 38, 39
 Beghu 101
 Begtuzun 22
 Bhawan 31(n)
 Bhera, 24, 25, 27
 Bhim 15, 32
 Bhim, fort of 31
 Bhimpal 36
 Bias (Biyah) 31
 Biji Rai of Bhera 24, 25, 29
 Bilkatigin 13
 Bilkhan Koh 50
 Black Stone 7
 Bokhara 4, 12, 22, 49, 100
 Briggs, Gen. 10
 Brindaban 41
 Browne, E. 66(n)
 Buddha 14, 47

Buddhism 5, 14
 Bundelkhand 42, 45, 46, 70
 Bu Ali Sina (Avicenna) 67, 68
 Bul Kasim bul Hakam 94
 Bul Sahl Zauzni 91
 Burarie 25(n)
 Bust 14
 Buwaih, the Shiaite dynasty, 4
 Buwahid Kingdom 59
 Buwahid, ruler of Ray, 68
 Byzantine Empire 109

Caliph 21, 35, 44, 49—Second, 84,—of Baghdad VII, 91,—Pious 62-63.

Caliphate 3, 36, 64, 69,—of Egypt 7,—Abbasid 2, 18

Carmathians 8, 34, 71, 91—of Multan 7

Carmathian heresy 25

Cathay 109

Catholic Church 82

Chahar Maqala 68(n)

Chakra 35(n)

Chandal Bhor, 42-43

Chand Rai of Sharwa 42, 43

Chakrasvamin 34, 35, 54(n)

Chenab 25, 32

Chengiz Khan 8, 62, 76

Christianity 5, 84

Constantinople 110

Dabshilim (Devasarum) 58

Darab 107

Darghan 49

Daud 34, 101, 110

Daud Jafar 108

Dandanigan 102, 108

Daulatabad IX

Delhi IX, 10, 16, 29, 105

Dipal Hari 99

Doab 38, 46

Egypt 109

Elliot 4, (n)

Ency. Britannica 51 (n)

Erzrum 109

Euphrates 110

Europe 82

Faiq 17, 22

Farawah 101

Faridun 65

Fariyab 99, 101

Farrukhi 66

Farrukhzad 107

Fathabad 104

Fatehpur 42

Fatimids of Egypt 3

Ferishta 13, 34(n), 39(n), 42, 47(n), 49(n), 51(n), 52, 58(n), 60(n)

Ferozah Palace 61

Firdausi 67, 68

Futuh us Salatin IX

Gabriel 5

Gakkhars 29, 31, 31

Ganges 41, 45(n), 52, 95

Georgia 110

Gharjistan 35

Ghaznin 10, 12, 13, 17, 18, 23(n), 26, 29, 30, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 40, 46, 48, 51, 53(n), 54(n), 57-59, 61, 71, 72, 78, 83, 89, 94, 95, 99, 103, 104, 105, 106, 108, 109—Ghazni'ain X

Ghazari Razi 66

Ghazz Turks 112, 113

Ghor 10, 33, 34, 108, 113

Gibbon 50, 99, 109

Gorkan 89

Gujrat 32, 51, 55, 57, 58, 70, 77

Gulistan IX, 65

Gwalior 29, 45, 48

Habib us Siyar 68(n)

Hadi 67(n)

Hadis 20

Hafiz 60

Hakim Nasir Khusrau 8

Halaku 8

Hamd ullah Mustawfi 13, 49(n)

Hansi 98, 101, 104, 105

Harun ur Rashid 3

Harshavardhana 41

Hasnak (Ahmad Husain bin Mikal) 21, 73, 88-92

Hazar Asp 38

Herat 17, 26, 90
 Hind 48
 Hindu Shahi dynasty 15, 42
 Hindustan 56, 61, 79, 94, 95,
     105, Rais of 28
 Hinduism 84
 Houtsma, Prof. 51(n)

Ibn-i-Asir 52
 Ilak Khan 26, 49—of Kashghar 2
 Imams of Shiaism 6
 India 14, 23(n), 46, 49, 57, 68,
     81, 82, 107
 Indus 24, 29, 59, 98, 104
 Iqbal, Dr. M. 49(n)
 Iraq 3, 44, 63, 84, 109, 112
 Isfahan 59, 70, 109
 Islam 5, 21, 22, 47, 75, 82-84,
     87, 106
 Ismailis 7, 8
 Israel 49-51, bin Seljuq 101
 I-tsiz 109

Jainism 5
 Jaipal 14, 15, 16, 23, 24, 25
 Jami 69
 Jamna 39, 40, 41
 Jamshed 65
 Jats 98
 Jaxartes 4, 22, 49, 70, 111, 112
 Jhelum 24, 25, 27, 37, 38, 95, 98
 Judaism 5
 Julian 111
 Jund 100
 Jurjan 17

Kabul 98, river 47(n)
 Kaffiristan, tribes of 46
 Kai-kaus 65
 Kai-Khusrau 65, 66
 Kalanjar 16, 29, 42, 45, 48, 50, 78
Kalila and Dimna 108
 Kamalu 15
Kamil ut Tawarikh 52(n)
 Kandhar 90
 Kannauj 16, 29, 39(n), 43, 41, 42
 Kanishka 14
 Kara-Kum 101
 Karakhatai tribes 112
 Kashghar 28, 49, Khan of 4, 100, 111

Kashmir 37, 38, 52(n) 86, 96,
     —pass 47
 Ken 42
 Khandah, fort of 57
 Khiljis 10
 Khorasan IX, 4, 12, 13, 16, 17,
     22, 26, 36, 38, 44, 49, 51,
     57, 85, 89, 98, 101, 102,
     108, 112; Colonists of 107
 Khwarazm 38, 49, 68, 100, 113
 Khwarazm Shah 38
 Khwaja Ahmad bin Hasan
     Maimandi 20, 72, 90, 93
 Khwaja Mohd. bin Abdus Samad
     103
 Kiani Empire 64
 Kira river 47(n)
Kitab ul Hind 68
 Korah 42
 Krishna 41, 52, 87
 Kshattriyas 10, 79
 Kullur 15, 47
 Kunch 42
 Kurds 102
 Kushan Empire 14

Laertes 65
 Lagaturman 15
 Lahore 15, 21, 24(n), 36, 41, Rai
     of 28, 43 47 77, 79, 95,
     103-106
 Lamaghan 15, 16
Literary History of Persia 67(n)
 Lohkot 37, 47

Mahabharata 41
 Mahayana Buddhism 14
 Mahaban 38, 39
 Mahadeo 53(n)
 Mahmud, Sultan VI, VII, IX, 15,
     17, 22, 28, 31, 32, 34, 37,
     38-44, 46, 47, 49-54, 58, 62,
     63, 65, 66, 73, 74, 78,
     81(n), 86, 88, 91, 94, 97,
     103, 105, 106, 107, 111,
     —war with Jaipal 15, appointed governor of Khorasan 17, personality and character 17et seq, faith in God, 21, title of Sultan 22, robe of honour

- from the Caliph 22. title of Amin ul Millat and Yamin ud Daulah 22, attacks Peshawar 23, conquest of Siestan 24, first invasion of Multan 25, alliance with Ilak Khan 26, relations with Anandpal 27-29, in Waihind 30, conquest of Ghor 33, against Multan 34, at Thaneswar 34, and the Caliph 36, M's Sister 38, at the fort of Munj 42, marches through Rajputana 54, battle of Somnath 55-56, at Anhilwara 57, and the Jats 58, death 60, as patron of arts 66, character and value of his work 64 et seq, sense of justice 74, first Muslim Emperor 76
- Majdud 98, 103, 104
Makhzan ul Asrar 108
 Malik Shah 110-112
 Mandkakar 96
 Mansur 12, 22
 Margha pass 37
 Marigalah 103
 Masud VI, 21, 57, 59, 88, 89, 91-94, 98, 100-103
 Masud II, 107
 Mathura 39, 40, 41, 42, 44
 Maudud 103, 104-107
 Mawaraun Nahr 14, 44, 99, 110, 111, 112
 Mazdak 8
 Mecca 9, 34
 Merv 101, 102
 Minhaj us Siraj 13
 Minor Dynasties 63
 Minuchihri 66
 Mir Khond 49(n)
 Mohd. bin Qasim 25
 Mohd. bin Suri 33
 Mohd. bin Ali Rawandi 49
 Mohammad 103, 104, 112
 Mohd. Bahalira 108
 Mongol 2, 8, 9, 15, 86, 113
 Muizzuddin Bahram Shah 108
 Mulahidah 6
 Mulazgird (Madikerb) 110
 Multan 25-28, 34, 58, 71, 77, 103, 104, heretics of 29
 Munj (Munjhawan) 42
- Nagarkot (Kangra) 27, 105, 106, temple of 31, 10
 Nagrahar 104
 Naishapur 17, 22, 89, 102
 Nanda 45, 46, 48
 Nardin (Ninduna) 34, 36, 37, 47(n)
 Neo-Platonist 6
 Nidar Bhim 36-38, 43, 45, 47
 Nile 109
 Nialtigin 97
 Nisa 101
 Nizam ul Mulk 8, 111
 Nizam uddin 39(n)
 Nizami Aruzi 68(n)
 Nizami Ganjavi 108
 Nizamiah University 111
- Omar Khayyam 111
 Omayyad Caliphs 3, 9, 63
 Osman 5
 Oxus 22, 49, 100, 101, 110
- Pacific Ocean 9
 Pahonj 42
 Param Deo 57
 Pathans 10
 Persia 3, 4, 8, 17, 18, 44, 46-48, 51, 63-65, 70, 75, 76, 84, 85, 89, 100, 101, 107, 109
 Persian Renaissance 63, 87
 Peshawar 14, 16, 23, 24(n)
 Pirey 13
 Plato 2
 Punjab 18, 28, 29, 33, 38, 39, 44, 73, 74, 94, 98, 104, 105, 108
 Prajapati 53(n)
 Prophet 20, 65, 84, 86
 Pur-i-Jaipal 42(n)
- Qazi Shirazi (Abul Hasan Ali) 94-96
 Qirat 47(n)
 Quran 2, 6, 65, 84
 Qusdar 14

Rahat us Sudur 49, 50(n) 51(n)

Rahib (Ramganga) 45, battle of 47

Rai Hardat 39

Rai Kulchand 39

Rajput 30, 32

Rajputana 54, 58

Rajyapala 41, 42, 45

Ram 99

Rauzat us Safa 8, 51(n)

Ravi 106

Ray 18, 59, 89, 99, 108, 109, 110

Raziuddin Ibrahim 107

Romanus Diogenese 110

Rukn ud daulah Daylami 4

Rupar 107

Rustam 65, 88

Sachau 15

Sadi IX, X, 65, 69

Sakti 32(n)

Sakya Sinha 14, 47

Salt Range 25

Saman, House of 4

Samanids 4, 23, Kingdom 16, 22,
26; King 12, 17, 49

Samarkand 18, 36, 48, 49, 70, 100

Sangram 38

Sarakhs 101, 102

Saraswati 51, 55

Sassanid Empire 64, 70; Emperors
75

Scythian Turks 14

Seljuq 49—51, 59, 74, 76, 94, 98,
99 et Seq, 103, 106, 108,
113

Seunra 42

Shah 100

Shah Nama 43, 107

Shahabuddin Ghorī 106

Shaikh Abul Hasan Kharqani
20, 56

Shaikh Farid 107

Shaikh Hamid Lodi 25

Shaikh Moinuddin of Ajmer 87

Sharwa 41, 43

Sher-ul Ajam 68(n)

Shias 5, 59

Shiaism 5, 6

Shibli Numani 67(n)

Shiraz 95

Sindh 25, 58

Sino-Mongolian race 9

Siyasat Namah 8, 111

Smith U. A. 42

Somnath 51, 52, 55-57, 80

Sonpat 99

Soyand Rai 89, 97

Spain 3

Srivargarh 42

Studies in Persian Literature 67(n)

Subuktigin IX, 12, 13, 15, 16—
18, 20, 24, 25, 72

Sukhpal (Newasa Shah) 27, 28

Sultan Sanjar 108, 112

Sunnis 5, 7, 8

Sunnism 5, 6

Sutlej 28

Swat, tribes of 46

Syria 63, 84, 91, 109

Tabaqat i Nasiri 49(n) 50(n) 51(n)

Takinabad 89

Taliquan 99, 101

Tarikh i Alfi 57(n)

Tarikh i Ali Subuktigin VI

Tarikh i Guziah 8

Tarikh i Zain ul Maasir 53(n)

Tarojanpal 15, 42

Tartars 9, 22, 71, 99

Tasawwuf 6

Tauras 109

Thaneswar 34, 35, 54(n) 104, 105

Tibetans 9

Tilak 96, 97

Tilla 37

Timur 76

Transoxania 4, 27, 48-49, 50(n) 51

Trans-Gangetic plain 28, 38

Trilochanpal 34(n) 36, 38, 42, 43,
45, 46, 52 (n)

Tughlaqs 10

Tughril 101, 107, 108, 109, 110

Turk 9, 10, 15, 109

Turkestan 3, 4, 18, 38, 49, 50(n)
112

Turkan Khatun 111

Turki Shahi dynasty 14

Turko-Persian Empires 63, 76

Turkomans 9, 49, 50(n) 51

Turko-Mongolian race 10

INDEX

- Ujjain 29
 Unsuri 66
 Upanishad 6
 Utbi 33, 34, 39(n) 41(n) 42(n) 45(n)
     52(n)
Vishnu 35(n)
- Waibind (Und) 23, 27, 30, 32, 80
Yamin ud daulah 22
 Yusuf b. Subuktigin 82
 Yusuf Qadar Khan 49, 100
Zoroastrianism 84

ALLAMA
IQBAL LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY OF KASHMIR
HELP TO KEEP THIS BOOK
FRESH AND CLEAN.